To Stay Put, Keep Moving. Is New York Sinking? No. Sitting Pretty, But— Our Pawnshop Finance.

By ARTHUR BRISBANE

(Copyright, 1928.)

SMALL storekeepers see black clouds ahead, and jobbers, ignored by chain stores, see ruin. And bankers plan for the biggest chain of drug stores, with a preliminary investment of ten millions.

NEVERTHELESS, "little men" survive, sometimes.

Mr. Schulte had a cigar stand in a small-town hotel. Then he had a good-sized store in New York, when suddenly the United Cigar Store chain threatened ruin.

Said Schulte, "If others form chains, why not I?" His stores are everywhere. He and "United" may combine, making an opening for another Schulte.

Small stores might combine, jobbers might take up ownership of factories. Anything can be met, by using your brains, nothing by mournful whining.

As Charles Francis Murphy said, when he moved uptown, "To stay where you are, keep moving."

MEANWHILE chain store owners will NOT be delighted to hear that cigar store chains plan to become miniature drug stores, with many additional lines of "quick-turnover" merchandise.

This is no country for Rip Van Winkles.

BRITISH science discusses the question, "Is New York City sinking into the sea?"

Dr. Johnson says New York used to sink, very slowly, but stopped it 3,000 years ago.

So buy New York real estate, fearlessly, the more so as New York's coast line is said to be earthquake-proof, and another deep professor says New York City should be a separate state, because it will have 18,000,000 population in 40 years.

A good corner, in a city of 18 millions, ought to be valuable, and New York never had a real estate boom.

MR. ROGERS, Beverly Hills philosopher, says "We don't have to worry about anything. No nation in the history of the world was ever sitting so pretty."

THAT he writes for publication, but privately he adds: "Unfortunately, other nations sitting pretty have had rude awakenings. Croesus, earth's richest king, sat pretty, showing his piles of gold to the wise man, who remarked: 'If any man should come with better iron, he would be master of all this gold.'

"LATER, Croesus was sitting, not so pretty, on a bonfire, built by Cyrus the Great, and yelling mournfully, 'Oh, Solon! Solon!'

"Also the Persian King was sitting pretty, on his throne of gold, with hundreds of thousands of armed men and long lines of fighting elephants before him.

"Along came Alexander with only 30,000 men, but with modern weapons and ideas — the long spear, the Macedonian flying wedge, since borrowed by football coaches. Soon Persia's King was in flight, a little later dead, his wife and daughter in Alexander's power. But, I must say, he treated them like a gentleman.

"The moral is, we need airplanes and plenty of them."

FOREIGN financiers will marvel that Secretary Mellon, borrowing for Uncle Sam, is compelled to pay an outrageously high interest rate, about 25 per cent higher than he expected.

That condition, due to promotion of usury by the Federal Reserve, ought to interest President Coolidge when he returns to Washington next week.

WALL STREET is more like a pawnshop than a financial district. Men borrowing on first-class Stock Exchange security, with ample margin of safety, pay 8 per cent, very much like some poor creature taking his overcoat to a pawnbroker.

THE Federal Reserve's pretext, conniving and helping lenders to gouge the public, forcing the world's money market back to London, is:

"We must check stock gambling; brokers' loans are too high."

Usury is a crime, or ought to be, and the Federal Reserve that was to stabilize credits, now making itself the promoter of wholesale usury, a sort of tout for financial pawnbrokers, is NOT an edifying spectacle.

SCIENCE has found a way to destroy typhoid germs in drinking water by use of ultra-violet rays, very important, under prohibition.

The French solved the typhoid and other problems by mixing their drinking water with red wine. A weak dilution is alleged to kill germs.

But that involves compromising with the Demon Rum. Violet rays are better, if you can arrange to have them as handy as a bottle of claret.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA is much excited about a girl 9 years old, Mathilde Petrovitch, said to have performed miracles and to be "in direct communion with the Virgin Mary."

An Associated Press dispatch describes "extraordinary religious manifestations by the peasants, flocking by tens of thousands to the village of Teldince, where the girl lives."

They believe that the girl, interceding for them, obtains relief for physical infirmities. The government has erected barracks and tents for the pilgrims.

The Catholic Church thus far has not taken action nor given any approval.

IN THIS century, many believe that divine power, able to relieve misery, would do so for the sake of unhappy sufferers, without waiting for a child of 9 to suggest action.

ESTAB. 1927—VOL. 3—NO. 38 ★ SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1928 ★ THREE CENTS

GIRL BATTLES BURGLAR AS THUG FELLS WOMAN

LINK SAME MAN IN BOTH ATTACKS

Mrs. Mary Stewart, 31, of 1930 Buena Vista street, North Side was blackjacked by a thug last night. Shortly afterward, in the same neighborhood, Miss Minnie McIntosh, 26, of 1502 Buena Vista street, found a burglar under her bed. He escaped after a struggle.

The police think the man in Miss McIntosh's room was the same that attacked Mrs. Stewart. He is described as white, between 25 and 30, about 5 feet, 4 inches tall, shabbily dressed in a dark suit and light cap, looking like a tramp.

Mrs. Stewart had alighted from a street car at Perrysville avenue and Buena Vista street and was walking home when a man sneaked up behind her, at a dark spot, and felled her with a blow on the head with a blunt weapon believed to have been a billy. The approach of a passerby caused the assailant to flee.

Mrs. Stewart was taken to the Allegheny General Hospital, where it was found necessary to use three stitches to close the gash in her scalp. She was then removed to her home.

When Miss McIntosh discovered the intruder in her room she screamed. He seized her, but her uncle, John Henaghen, had heard the outcry and ran to her aid. The thug struck him a blow in the face, and as he recoiled the intruder escaped through the front door—but not until both Henaghen and Miss McIntosh had had a good look at him.

Downtown Restaurant Afire

Grease in an air shaft, leading from the kitchen of the Quality Lunch, in the basement of the Buhl Building, Sixth avenue and Smithfield street, ignited this morning, but caused little damage.

Fire apparatus which assembled at the corner caused much excitement for the crowd of Saturday morning shoppers.

Scalpers Corner Police Meet Tickets

There is no honor among ticket scalpers, even if the tickets are for the annual field meet this afternoon.

Police Superintendent Peter P. Walsh today issued to the public a warning not to purchase tickets for the meet. The sale of the pasteboards stopped last Thursday.

It appears that a number of persons came into possession of large blocks of the tickets and are speculating with them.

"If you intend to witness the meet and haven't a ticket, don't buy them from scalpers," said the Superintendent. "Buy them only at the park."

Doped Girl Mum

Said to be suffering from the effects of drugs, Miss Mary Ladissior, 23, of Detroit, was rushed to the Allegheny General Hospital early today after she had fainted in a taxicab in Fifth avenue. After being revived at the hospital, she was arrested on a suspicious person charge.

The girl told physicians at the hospital and police at the Central Station that she had come to Pittsburgh two days ago in search of work. She refused, however, to tell where she had obtained the drugs.

Pirates Eye 2nd Place

By CHARLES J. DOYLE.
Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph Staff Correspondent.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 8.—Although virtually out of the running in the pennant chase, the Pirates today have set a determined chin in the direction of second place.

They will have to fight every inch of the way if they expect to land that honor before their playing season comes to a close on the last day of this month.

Meeting the league-leading Cardinals at Sportsman's Park here again today, Donie Bush has placed his faith in Carmen Hill to start narrowing the gap. He will likely be opposed to Wee Willie Sherdel who took the measure of the Oaklander in their last meeting at Forbes Field last Saturday.

The Pirates are now nine games behind the leaders, and the best they can do is to get an even split in their present series with the McKechnie crew.

Yesterday's fracas, which was lost to the Cards, 6 to 3, saw two Bucs ruin their record streaks. Sparky Adams blew his two hundred thirty-sixth offering, which was just an ordinary play, while Remy Kremer took to the dust after having had the honor of winning nine in a row.

3 PLUNGE TO DEATH IN FLIGHT TO CURE MUTE

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Sept. 8.—(AP.)—An airplane trip undertaken in an effort to improve the condition of Luke Briotta, 6-year-old mute, cost the lives of three persons when their plane plunged 2,000 feet into a swamp near Randall Field Airport, Agawam, a suburb of this city.

The accident, late yesterday, was witnessed by hundreds. Those killed were the boy, Charles Potholm, 25, of Hartford, Conn., pilot employed by the Massachusetts Airways Corporation, owner of the plane, and Abraham H. Mazer, 21, of this city, a passenger.

Potholm presumably attempted a loop, contrary, it is said, to instructions received before leaving the ground. The pilot had been told to avoid stunts, although the boy's father, Joseph Briotta, had asked that some be employed, in the belief that they might help restore the child's vocal powers. The elder Briotta saw the tragedy.

As the plane started to level out after the loop, the left wing suddenly broke away and a second later there was an explosion. As the ship plunged to earth the right wing collapsed and the plane fell vertically.

All three victims were strapped in their seats. Potholm was breathing but unconscious, and died while being carried to a field. The others were dead.

Potholm had been flying three years. He had returned Thursday from a barnstorming tour of Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine. J. A. Hearn, vice president of Airways Corporation, said the pilot was competent and that the plane had been found in first-class condition.

Nab Three With Guns In Auto

Three alleged highwaymen were arrested by Hill district police early today when they were discovered in an automobile in which two revolvers and two flashlights were found.

They are Carl Appel, 24, of 55 Protectory place; John Buzzy, 19, of 2419 Wadsworth street, and James Davis, 26, of 342 Soho street.

Police say the three were sitting in an automobile, parked on Clark street near Conductor way when discovered. They refused to tell their names when first questioned and were unable to give a good account of themselves. They were charged with being suspicious persons.

Falling in School, Breaks Arms And Nose

CHARLEROI, Pa., Sept. 8.—John Flack, 12, slipped and fell on the tile floor of the Bellevernon school yesterday and fractured both arms and his nose. He is reported resting easily in his home in that community.

THOMAS MARSHALL, 94, DIES AT HICKORY HOME

WASHINGTON, Pa., Sept. 8.—Thomas Marshall, 94, of Berryhill, banker, farmer and churchman, is dead at Hickory, Washington county. He was born in this county on September 19, 1834. He was one of the organizers of the Farmers National Bank of Hickory, and was its vice president.

HOOVER LEAD PILES UP IN STATE STRAW VOTE

Herbert Hoover is now leading Gov. Alfred E. Smith by 1,394 votes in the straw vote poll of Pennsylvania conducted by the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph.

Another big Hoover day in the balloting enabled the Republican candidate to draw further away from his adversary in the Presidential race. More than 16,000 registered and enrolled electors from various counties of the state have registered their preference.

The latest returns gave Hoover a net gain of 332 for the day. This gain was about equally divided between Philadelphia and the rural counties. In Philadelphia, women cast about three votes for each candidate for each four votes returned by men. In the rural districts the proportion of women voting was much smaller.

The Pennsylvania totals in the poll, conducted in connection with the nation-wide canvass by the Hearst papers, to date are: Hoover 8,776, 5,588 men and 3,188 women; Smith 7,382, 4,756 men and 2,626 women.

This vote in 1924 was: Coolidge 11,027, 6,873 men and 4,154 women; Davis 1,215, 902 men and 313 women; LaFollette 1,328.

AIRPLANE ENTERS HUNT FOR DAPPER DEATH CAR

An airplane search for the auto of Dr. Dapper, in which the physician's slayer escaped after the killing two weeks ago, was inaugurated yesterday by County Detectives Michael Stabile and Frank Ritz.

Lanes and by-roads leading from the scene of the crime at the Lebanon Church were traced and gradually the sweep of the airplane became greater until the entire section had been carefully gone over.

The detectives used binoculars during their trip hoping to get some trace of the car, which they believed may have been driven into a little used lane or woods and abandoned.

Dr. Dapper's tragic death might not have developed into the mystery which now confronts county detectives if police of surrounding towns, the state highway patrol and other police agencies had been notified of the crime immediately, it was revealed today.

Almost 12 hours elapsed before the State Highway Patrol and State Police headquarters at Greensburg were asked to assist in running down the slayer who sped

Shots Halt Theft

Three young men riding in an automobile were fired on by Patrolman Charles Otterson in Brighton road, near Pennsylvania avenue, early today when the officer detected the youths stealing gasoline from a pump at a service station. The youths escaped.

Otterson reported to the Woods Run station that the three had broken the lock on a pump at the Penn Liberty Refining Company station and were stealing gasoline when he discovered them. He does not believe that any of the five shots he fired took effect.

Braddock Loan Man Robbed

Two Negroes held up Max Lazear, 54, proprietor of the Braddock Loan Company, 562 Braddock avenue, Braddock, this morning, beat him unconscious with the butt of a revolver and escaped with $150 in Liberty bonds and jewelry valued at $100.

A milman appeared as the Negroes were rifling the safe. Frightened, they ran out of the shop and fled in the direction of Homestead.

Lazear was waiting on the Negroes when one slugged him on the head. He is in the Braddock General Hospital, in a serious condition. His skull is believed fractured.

Crash Victims Sue Host for Injuries

George C. Blair, Sr., 423 West street, Wilkinsburg, has been made defendant in a suit for $30,000 damages for personal injuries by Mr. and Mrs. Samuel C. Yates. It is alleged Blair failed to keep awake while driving the car while they were his guests.

In the bill filed by Attorney William D. Grimes it is alleged that Blair did not have the car under proper control when he was near Munday's Corners and Armagh, Cambria county, September 19, 1926. The car left the road, crashed into a telegraph pole and went down a hill.

AIR RACER CRASHES; LEADERS 'IN' HERE

BULLETIN.

Seven fliers of class B planes had arrived at Bettis Field from New York shortly before noon today, in the second group to take off in the trans-continental air derby. Four were reported down in the Pittsburgh district as a result of fog banks that rendered flying extremely difficult and hazardous.

A heavy fog that caused one flier to crash and that was slow in lifting formed clouds of danger to 20 racing pilots who began dropping on Bettis Field before noon today from New York, where they had hopped off in the second cross-country air derby of the week.

A few minutes after the first two ships—one of them representing Pittsburgh—had pierced the dense atmosphere successfully on the first leg of the race, word was received that four planes had been forced down in this district.

HOLMAN CRASHES

Early reports had nome injured in the forced landings. C. W. "Speed" Holman, of St. Paul, was forced down near Washington, Pa., but escaped injury, although the nose of his Laird plane tore into the earth and the ship turned over.

Paul R. Braniff, of Oklahoma City, Okla., was reported down near Latrobe.

OTHERS DOWN

From Bridgeport, O., came a report that Stuart F. Auer, of Milwaukee, Wis., had been forced down, and at Glenn Hope, Pa., G. C. Gulick was reported in a forced landing in a Waco 10.

PITTSBURGH FLIER SECOND

J. Warren Smith, flying a Cessna monoplane, seventeenth in the field that hopped off from Roosevelt Field, New York, was the second pilot to reach Bettis. His knowledge of the valleys of Western Pennsylvania enabled him to outspeed all but one through the dangerous streaks of fog. Smith's flying time was three hours.

Leading the field was John Livingston, Monmouth, Ill., in a Waco 10. Livingston landed at Bettis Field in 2 hours 57 minutes flying time, with an empty gas tank on a "dead stick" and told attaches he had been looking for an emergency

Class "C" Air Race Starts

ROOSEVELT FIELD, N. Y., Sept. 8.—(AP.)—The four Class C planes of the cross-country air derby got under way at 11:27 a. m., Pittsburgh time, today.

They trailed the 20 class B planes by more than three hours. R. C. Cantwell, flying a Lockheed-Vega, was first into the air in the C division.

field to land when he sighted the Bettis Field flares, sent up to guide the racers.

An indication that the fog was lifting somewhat was furnished when the third, fourth and fifth planes dropped out of the clouds on the McKeesport field. They were: R. J. Merritt, in a Ryan B-1, 11:08 a. m.; L. F. Shoenhair, Detroit, Buhr Air sedan, 11:18 a. m.; Leo Nomis, Los Angeles, Travelair plane, 11:24 a. m.

ROOSEVELT FIELD, N. Y., Sept. 8.—(AP.)—Bound for a share in a $15,000 pot of gold at the end of a flight across the continent, 20 airplane pilots in Class B of the cross-country air derby took off this morning for Los Angeles. But a few minutes after their departure advices were received here indicating dangerous fog over McKeesport, Pa., the first stop in the contest.

The Class C race, scheduled for this morning, was immediately deferred.

Twenty minutes after L. F. Shoenhair, of Los Angeles, soared from the field as the first contestart to depart, Ray J. Merritt, of New Castle, Pa., disappeared into the western sky and all were away on a five-day race of approximately 3,000 miles, divided in 13 stops before the contest ends at Mines Field, Los Angeles.

WOMAN IN RACE

One woman, Mrs. E. W. Pendleton, of New York, rode with Shoenhair, who also carried Tom Colby, of Detroit, in his Buhl plane.

The contestants — all driving planes with engine displacement of 510 to 800 cubic inches—were routed to proceed from McKeesport to Columbus, O., before continuing to Terre Haute, Ind., for rest tonight.

The itinerary and distances between stops for the Class B fliers are: New York to McKeesport, Pa., 315 miles; Columbus, O., 171; Terre Haute, Ind., 238 (overnight); St. Louis, 162; Kansas City, 240; Wichita, Kan., 180; Oklahoma City, 153 (overnight); Fort Worth Tex., 193; Midland, Tex., 286; Pecos, Tex., 95; El Paso, 183 (overnight); Tucson, Ariz., 270; Yuma, Ariz., 220 (overnight); Los Angeles, 233. J. W. Smith, Pittsburgh, Pa. Cessna monoplane.

J. Sodowsky, Marietta, O. Cessna monoplane.

Charles W. Meyers, Troy O., Waco biplane.

R. J. Merritt, New Castle, Pa., Ryan monoplane.

Francis Bowhan, who announced his withdrawal after the dispute over prizes on Thursday, was the only entrant who did not start. All the others who protested against the entry of Waco and Laird "ringers," which they claimed were built for racing, were on line.

CLASS C WAITING

Meantime, four Class C planes were lined up at Roosevelt Field waiting for the word to start.

These fliers are competing for $10,000 in prizes while $15,009 is the lure for the Class B. Both will follow the same route, the first day's schedule calling for stops at McKeesport, Columbus, O., and the overnight station at Terre Haute, Ind.

"45" REPORTED DOWN

YORK, Pa., Sept. 8.—Unconfirmed reports that one of the planes in the Class B trans-bontinental air race which started from Roosebelt Field, L. I., bearing No. 45, had been forced down near York, were received here today.

ANOTHER IN TROUBLE

LEBANON, Pa., Sept. 8.—(AP.)—An aircraft monoplane racer bearing car No. X7629 and competition No. 110 on a wing, was forced to leave companions in class B of the national air derby here this morning. The pilot made a forced landing at 8:45 o'clock two miles west of Jonestown, this county, but took off again without giving his name after refueling.

PLANE HUNTS DEATH CAR

away into the night in Dr. Dapper's automobile, leaving the dying doctor and his bewildered father along a lonely road in Mifflin township almost three weeks ago.

Emergency patrols could have been sent out within an hour, and every road within 100 miles finecombed, highway officers assert, pointing out that they operate 27 substations throughout Western Pennsylvania.

However, they say, it was not until the next morning that they learned of the killing when State Police headquarters relayed a request, received a few minutes before, for help. Sergt. E. W. Bunch, who received the request from Allegheny county detectives, declared he was not notified until about 9 a. m.

"A man giving his name as Drexler talked," said Sergt. Bunch, "and he gave me a description of the machine which I immediately relayed to Highway Patrol headquarters here.

"We gladly would have sent out patrols the same night Dr. Dapper was killed and I know the Highway Patrol would have done the same."

County Detective Chief George W. Murren, out of town at the time of the slaying, referred to his reports when queried about this phase of the investigation.

The question has been raised why Dr. Dapper's father, Henry A. Dapper, vice president of the Fort Pitt Brewing Company, did not ask his son who shot him, but no effort has been made to determine why county detectives failed to question the physician before his death in the Homestead hospital.

Dr. Dapper was conscious, it is reported, for almost eight hours before his death, but none of the county sleuths talked with him, according to their own admissions.

Chief Murren said his men were told Dr. Dapper had given statements to a Mifflin township policeman and the physician who attended him. Further questioning would have lessened the patient's chances of recovery, Chief Murren says his men were told.

At one minute intervals, Rowland was followed by Robert Dake, Pittsburgh, flying an American Moth; Tex Rankin, Portland, Ore., in a Waco, and Dale G. Jackson, St. Louis, piloting a Swallow.

ROWLAND BOOSTS LEAD

Rowland increased his lead in elapsed time almost an hour yesterday by leading the pack into Ft. Worth from Kansas City. His unofficial time from New York was 14:14, as compared with 15:08 for Robert Dake, Pittsburgh, whose speedy American Moth has held second place from the start.

DIXMONT INSTALLS BEAUTY SHOP FOR WOMEN INMATES

The beauty parlor as an adjunct of medical science will e introduced at the Dixmont Hospital Monday.

This step in psychotherapy has een taken by Dr. H. A. Hutchinson, Dixmont superintendent, in the elief that pride of person is an excellent stimulant to mentally afflicted women, he announced today. t is the first time it has been done n Pennsylvania, although similar reatment has been employed in New York, New Jersey and West 'irginia.

A beauty parlor with equipment o apply all the treatments given n the commercial salon, except the ermanent wave, has been installed t the hospital. A skilled attendant as been retained to operate it.

The latest styles in bobbed hair, the neatest of manicuring and all the variations of the massage that cosmeticians have contrived will be available for the Dixmont inmates. The nervous strain of the permanent wave makes its use undesirable.

International News Service.

TUXEDO, N. Y., Sept. 8.—State police today are searching for the murderers, believed to be members of a bootlegging gang, who shot and killed Carl T. Wilder, a state motorcycle policeman stationed here.

Wilder was found dying late yesterday on a lonely road to Greenwood Lake, N. Y., by a couple in a sedan bearing a New Jersey license, who telephoned police that they had passed the body of the state trooper.

When he was found, Wilder was clutching a man's necktie, evidently wrenched loose in a struggle. He was semi-conscious, but died a short time later in a hospital here, of a wound inflicted by a .38-caliber bullet. His motorcycle was found in the road near the body.

STATE TO GIVE HOOVER 500,000 MAJORITY—HEFLIN

"Hoover will be elected by 10,000,000 to 15,000,000 majority," said Senator Thomas J. Heflin, Democrat, of Alabama, in Pittsburgh yesterday. He based the estimate, he explained, on things he had noted and observed on a lecture tour that has taken him into many states.

Senator Heflin delivered a lecture at the Washington (Pa.) fair grounds Thursday night on "The Dangers that Threaten the American Government." He will speak tonight at a Ku Klux Klan demonstration at Shaver's Grove, on the Monroeville road, 1½ miles north of Turtle Creek.

"I have delivered a dozen lectures in Pennsylvania," said the Senator, "and feel that I know the situation in this state pretty well. Smith has about as much chance of carrying Pennsylvania as a mouse-colored mule has of operating an airplane. Hoover's majority in Pennsylvania will be at least 500,000, and possibly 1,000,000."

"For whom do you intend to vote, Senator?"

"I have not said. I will not answer that question until Gov. Smith answers questions I propounded to him.

"I asked him if it was true, as a New York newspaper said, that he endorsed social equality between the Negro and white races. I asked him if he approves of the dance halls in New York where Negro men dance with white women. I asked him if he approved of Negroes and whites attending the same church. He has not answered."

Heflin said Hoover had a good chance of carrying not only the border states but also Virginia, North Carolina, "and some other southern states, which I will not name."

He mentioned a number of prominent Democrats of Alabama who are working for Hoover, and said the revolt against the Smith leadership was general throughout the South.

Three-fourths of the women of the country are for Hoover," he declared.

Heflin declared John J. Raskob, Democratic national chairman, was a Republican and retained his membership in the Union League Club of Philadelphia, to which only Republicans may belong. The Senator said he ascertained on a recent visit to Philadelphia that Raskob had not resigned from the club.

Commenting on the fact that eggs were thrown at speakers who addressed an anti-Smith meeting in Alabama Thursday night, Heflin said the incident would make votes for Hoover.

Kills Wife With Ax

International News Service.

NEW YORK, Sept. 8.—Arrest of Alfred Wheeler, 48, of Brooklyn, who, last night, brutally murdered his wife, Lillian, with a hatchet and hammer and seriously wounded his 18-year-old daughter, Hindel, is expected today.

Wheeler made his escape before police arrived.

His daughter arrived home shortly before midnight to find Wheeler beating her mother. Before Miss Wheeler could escape, he turned on her, fracturing her skull with a hammer and slashing her face with a razor.

A young son, John, 11, was asleep on the upper floor of the house when Wheeler attacked his wife. Hearing the screams of his mother, the boy ran out of the house to neighbors, who arrived at the Wheeler home just as the daughter ran screaming and bleeding from the house. She was taken to the neighbors' home and a doctor summoned.

She was taken to a hospital where it was reported that she may not live. Before she lapsed into unconsciousness Miss Wheeler told police her story of the murder and attack.

On a table in the Wheeler home police found a note written by Wheeler which read:

"I am doing this because my family tormented me beyond endurance."

MME. ALDA, WED 18 YEARS, NOW ASKS FOR DIVORCE

NEW YORK, Sept. 8.—(AP.)—An 18-year romance of the opera was at an end today. Divorce proceedings have been brought by Mme. Frances Alda, Metropolitan soprano, against Giulio Gatti-Casazza, director of the company.

The suit charges incompatibility.

The singer announced here that it was filed six weeks ago in Nogales, Sonora, Mexico, by Mexican attorneys acting for Mme. Alda's counsel. Reports that the action would not be contested were not confirmed as Gatti-Casazza is now in Europe.

"We have been separated for three years," Mme. Alda said, "but we have always been perfectly good friends. I plan to sing next season as usual, at the Metropolitan Opera."

Gatti-Casazza's contract with the Metropolitan, where he has been impresario for more than 20 years, runs until 1931.

Before she moved to her country house at Great Neck, Long Island, while her husband established a residence in a New York hotel, Mme. Alda was quoted in Paris as having said that the impresario made an ideal husband except for his temperament, which she said was not conducive to a happy home life.

GANGSTER CHIEF SLAIN, BODYGUARD DYING

By GENE HOFFMAN,
International News Service.

CHICAGO, Sept. 8.—While all Chicago stood appalled today over the daring assassination of Tony Lombardo, one of the most powerful figures in gangland, his faithful bodyguard, Tony Ferraro, felled in the same deadly volley of bullets, was fighting for life at the Cook County Hospital.

Although probably fatally wounded, Ferraro, in keeping with the traditional code of gangland, steadfastly refused to give police any information as to the identity of the slayers. That Ferraro knows them, police have no doubt.

BOLDEST KILLINGG

In Chicago's long history of gangster killings, the murderous attack on Lombardo and his aides late yesterday was the most spectacular and dramatic to date.

It occurred in the heart of the downtown or "Loop" district, on the north side of Madison street between Clark and LaSalle. The evening rush hour was just getting under way and the street was filled with people.

Thousands heard the death-dealing pistol shots. That none of the bystanders was hit is a tribute to the deadly marksmanship of the gangster assassins. As the shots rang out, panic reigned in the crowded street. Automobiles crashed together as their occupants and hundreds of persons on the sidewalk dove for cover.

Presently the crowds emerged and then it was a milling, seething mass of humanity that police had to fight to maintain order. Lombardo lay in a pool of his own blood on the sidewalk where he fell. He was dead. Beside him, horribly wounded but still conscious, lay Ferraro, the bodyguard, a useless gun gripped tightly in his right hand.

A second Lombardo bodyguard, Joseph Lolordo, was caught by police as he chased a "man in gray" through a shoe store at the scene of the killing. Lolordo claimed not to know the man he was after, but admitted he was one of the "boss' killers."

Lombardo was known as "King of Mafia." He was second only to "Scarface Al" Capone in the councils of gangland. For years he has been an aid of the notorious Capone.

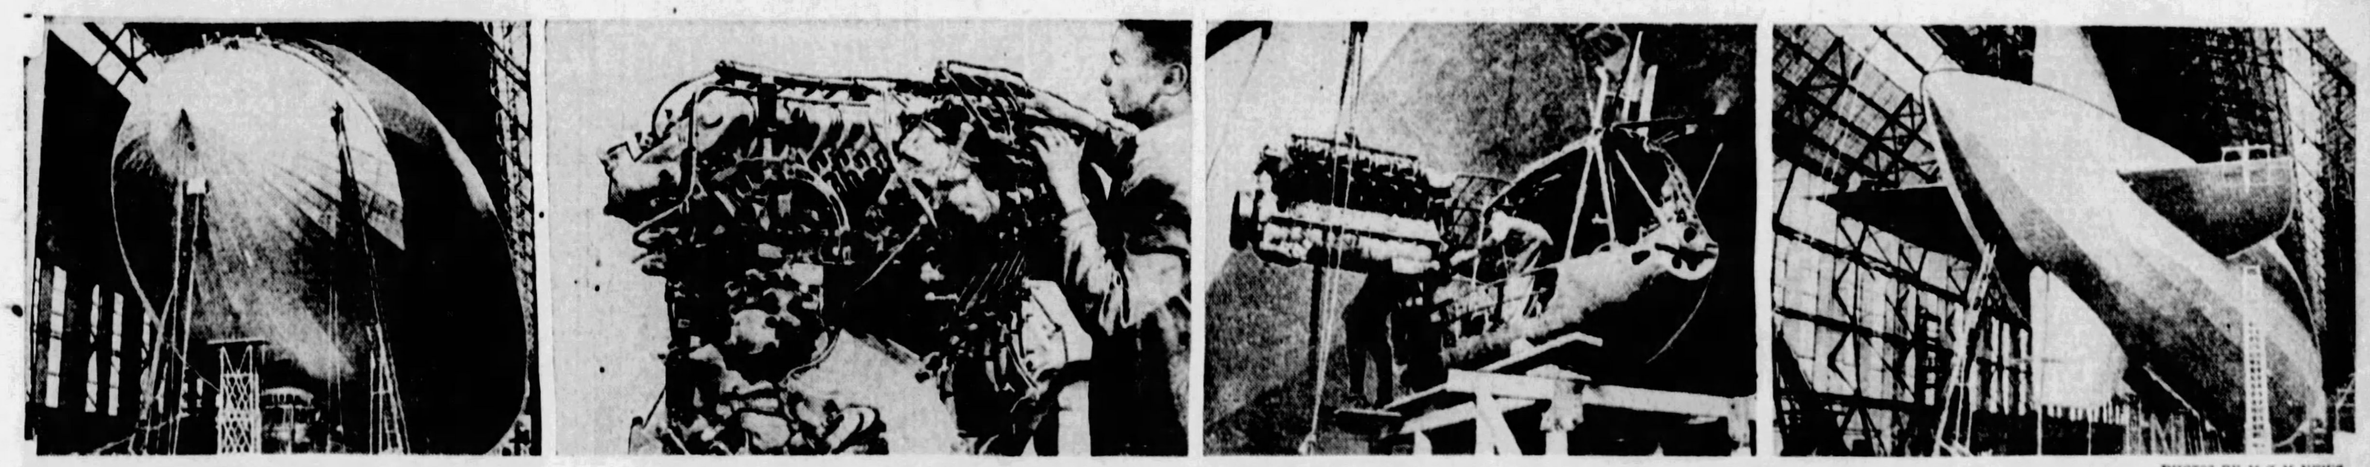
DOCTOR DISCOVERS FIRE DOWNTOWN; LOSS $2,000

An early morning downtown fire caused $2,000 damage to the quarters of the Pittsburgh Orthopedic Company at 635 Liberty avenue.

Smoke from the fire filled the entire building, and firemen had difficulty in locating the flames. Damage was estimated by Batallion Chief Richard Jones.

The flames are believed to have originated in the rear of the first floor and then spread to the second floor. Most of the damage was through the loss of stock. The fire was discovered by Dr. E. C. Meyer, of 1810 Beaver avenue, who saw smoke issuing from a transom. The origin is unknown.

World's Largest -:- New German Giant Almost Ready for Atlantic Hop -:- Complete as Liner



PHOTOS BY M-G-M NEWS.

READY!
The LZ-127, named Graf Zeppelin, is just about ready in Germany for a trans-Atlantic flight attempt. The ship is a sister of the USS, Los Angeles and one and one-half times as large. It has a gas capacity of 3,750,000 cubic feet.

FIVE MOTORS
This is one of the giant motors, of which there will be five. Each is a 520-horsepower Rohrbach capable of making the new ship cruise at about 85 miles per hour, using a new gas fuel rather than benzine products. The ship is at Friedrichafen, Germany.

GONDOLAS
Each of the five motors will be housed in a gondola slung from the side of the great ship. This photograph shows one of the engines as it was hoisted into place. The ship, it is estimated, will fly the Atlantic westwardly in 75 hours and eastwardly in 60.

PASSENGERS
The cabins will accommodate 20 passengers and the dirigible will carry 15 tons. Quarters include lounge, dining room, full kitchen equipment, and ten double bedrooms. Forty can be seated in the dining room. Dr. Hugo Eckner built the vessel.

Maskelyne, Master of Magic, Like His Famous Grandfather, Is Planning Tour of America

By GEORGE SEIBEL.

FOR nearly a century there has always been a Maskelyne giving performances of magic in London. The founder of the family was John Nevil Maskelyne, descendant of the famous astronomer, and the present representative is his grandson, Jasper Maskelyne, who is giving performances in St. George's Hall, where Londoners who wish to be mystified and amused can have their wishes fulfilled 365 days in the year.

Dropping in on young Jasper Maskelyne after the performance I asked him about the future of magic. "Science has produced so many miracles," I said, "that there seems to be little left for sleight-of-hand."

The modest young man, as clever a manipulator of cards and coins as there is on the stage, smiled modestly as he replied: "Science is wonderful, that's true, but not particularly amusing. We try to astonish people, and incidentally keep them laughing."

Mr. Maskelyne has described his own performance very well in these words. There is hardly a new principle in any of his tricks, but the pleasant way he shows them must appeal to children of all ages. He has a partner, Oswald Williams, and the pair even work in a song with their illusions. They unpack a box of tricks, and to accompany each one they sing a stanza with the refrain: "Now what do you think of that?"

Jasper Maskelyne told me many things of interest about his grandfather, the man who exposed the notorious Davenport Brothers, when they went to England to give their dark seances. John Nevil Maskelyne was a watch-maker in early life, like Robert-Houdin, the Parisian conjuror, who was the greatest genius in the history of magic. Like Robert-Houdin, Maskelyne began to construct automata, which were the craze at that time. Von [illegible] had puzzled the world with his automaton chess-player, and for the Empress Maria Theresa, and Maelzel finally brought it to America, where it was burned in a theater fire in Philadelphia. John Nevil Maskelyne constructed the most ingenious automaton ever shown—it was called "Psycho," played whist, performed arithmetical feats, and even card tricks. It stood on a glass cylinder, proving it was not manipulated by electricity, and people could sit or stand all around without detecting the principle by which it was worked.

Jasper Maskelyne thinks of visiting America some day. He is a pleasant young man, a very clever conjuror, and has the prestige of a name famous in magical history for nearly a century. If he perfects some of the illusions on which he is now working, he ought to create a sensation. He was a friend and admirer of the late Harry Houdini, and also of Howard Thurston, now the dean of American magicians. He wanted to know what new things had been brought out in America, but I could tell him of very little. In fact there seems to be a lull of invention in the whole world of magic. At Vienna I had a chat with Ottokar Fischer, who has retired from the stage and is only manufacturing for other necromancers. He admitted that since Buatier de Kolta, who created "The Vanishing Lady," there has been hardly any new principle worked into stage illusions. Sleight-of-hand performers are still numerous and their dexterity greater than ever, but they are developing nothing startlingly novel.

Herr Fischer showed me his collection of photographs of the graves of renowned magicians. "They are dead," he said, "and have left no great successors. But the time is at hand for a new Robert-Houdin, or a new Alexander Hermann. People enjoy such performances as much as ever, and I am kept busy building illusions. But I'd like to build something along new lines before I vanish from the stage myself."

Magic as a form of entertainment certainly is due for a revival, and a visit from young Maskelyne might promote interest in America, where there are nearly 5,000 professional and amateur conjurors, Pittsburgh itself having more than fifty.

SHARP TROUPE ENDS RUN

The George Sharp Players, whose current vehicle is "Nightie Night," will close their second summer season of stock in the Pitt with tonight's performance of the farce. The company, which has played 22 weeks through the spring and summer, leaves with the expectation of returning next March.

"The New Moon," a new operetta, opens its engagement in the Alvin next Monday night. It is expected there will be a number of New York producers, authors and others of the theatrical world present. Sigmund Romberg, composer of "The New Moon," will conduct the performance Monday night. Matinees will be given Wednesday and Saturday.

"Simba," the wild animal picture which Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson required four years to film in the interior of Africa, will begin its second and last week in the Nixon with a Monday matinee.

Helene Keller is prima donna of next week's tabloid musical comedy, "Wonderful Girl," in the Penn. On the screen will be Buster Keaton in "The Cameraman," poking fun at the maker of news pictures.

On the screen in the Stanley, beginning Monday, will be "State Street Sadie," starring Conrad Nagel and Myrna Ley, with William Russell featured. Harry Fox and Company in a musical act will be the stage feature.

"Four Sons" is the title of the next Fox-Movietone sound film that will replace "Street Angel" at the conclusion of its present successful run in the Aldine. Margaret Mann is its 60-year-old star. It is a tale of a German war mother.

The Grand and Liberty are to feature Clive Brook and Mary Brian in "Forgotten Faces" in their photoplay offerings.

Opening today, the Regent photoplay offering is to be Lionel Barrymore and May McAvoy in "The Lion and the Mouse," with dialogue.

Coming to the Harris and Sheridan Square screens the first half of the coming week is Laura La Plante in "Home, James." Each theater offers vaudeville also, Harry Kahne, mentalist, to be featured for three days in each house separately.

Joe Moss, Frank Kremer and Mina Bernard play principal parts in "Dainty Dolls," which opens with a midnight show in the Academy Sunday.

CLOTHES MAKE MAN -:- BUT HE HAS -:- NO TOGS MONOPOLY

Ruth Elder, f'r instance, looks over the duds she is to wear in her first motion picture, "Moran of the Marines," in which she will support Richard Dix.

Esther Ralston likes her new afternoon gown of black and white flat crepe, embroidered. The black hat is edged with lace.

Nancy Carroll calls this creation of beige lace over satin a tea frock.

Ruth Taylor is all ready for the next party bid with this flesh chiffon thing.

Dorothy Dwan, who has deserted the screen for the stage, says "goodby, summer" with supreme daintiness.

WHAT'S ON THE AIR

THE second Variety hour broadcast over WCAE and other stations of the NBC System will go on the air at 8 o'clock tonight. Featured entertainers will be Mildred Hunt, crooner; Merle Johnston's saxophone quartet, and The Serenaders, a male quartet. A program of popular music will be presented.

A program of characteristic American Indian music will be played by Lew White, organist, during a broadcast through the NBC system, including KDKA, at 7:30 o'clock. Mr. White, noted for his rendition of semi-classical and popular music, will open the program with selections from Victor Herbert's grand opera, "Natoma." Edward MacDowell, American composer, will be represented by his "From an Indian Lodge," in which may be heard the solemn chords of assemblage, as the Indians gather for prayer, and the sustained theme of the chant, punctuated by rhythmic drum beats. "By the Waters of Minnetonka," an authentic American Indian love song, arranged by Lieurance; Dvorak's "Indian Lament" from his sonatina for violin and piano, and an excerpt from Friml's light operetta, "Rose Marie," will comprise other numbers.

Charles Magnante will direct his accordion quartet in a program to be heard through KDKA at 9:30 o'clock. Lavallee's "Bridal Rose" overture will be played as the opening number, followed by the familiar clown song, "Vesti La Giubba," taken from Leoncavallo's tragic opera, "I Pagliacci." Mr. Magnante will play "Flapperette" as a solo. "Angela Mia," by Erno Rapee, and the well-known "Twelfth Street Rag" also will be heard in the unusual arrangement of four accordions. Frances Schaeffer, soprano, will present two numbers.

At 7 o'clock The Strollers will broadcast two dramatic sketches, under the direction of Mae Sweeny. The first sketch will be "The Curtain," a play of an escaped convict. The second sketch will be "Elopements While You Wait." The cast will include Nora O'Connor, Winifred Meehan, Gregg Bridges, Claude Morris and Gerard MacAteer.

At 6:05 o'clock Max Braddoc, the singing steel worker, will present a short recital over KDKA.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

THE TALE OF A COAT

By BERTHA R. McDONALD

IF anyone had intimated at the start that he, quiet, unromantic John Barlow, a bachelor still at 33, with an established law practice to his credit, would so far forget his bringing up that he would lose appetite and sleep because of a strange girl's face, he certainly would have laughed the idea to scorn, but old Dame Fate and the fat little god, Cupid, often combine their efforts to deal with futures in totally unexpected ways.

Barlow was dining alone at the Aqua Marine, a well known sea food place, when he first saw the girl. She too was alone, busy with an order of steamed clams, a thing which in itself drew him instinctively to her. So few people knew and enjoyed steamed clams as he and this fair unknown seemed to. It occurred to Barlow that it might be a bond between them if he ever came to know her.

The girl, who was by far the most attractive bit of feminity he had yet seen left before he had finished. He had all he could do to resist an impulse to follow her, finally bringing himself sternly to account with the mental admonition, "don't be a fool!"

The next evening Barlow found himself in the Acqua Marine at dinner time, at the same table, ordering steamed clams. When by the time he had eaten half of them she had not appeared, the clams lost their flavor and the entire fabric of his existence seemed suddenly to have become colorless and commonplace.

A week passed before he saw her again; this time in a popular road house with a party of several people. Barrow had driven his roadster to Briar Cliff in an effort to establish once more in his erstwhile well ordered life, the peace which an unknown girl's face had robbed it of; yet it was a decieded relief, he was forced to acknowledge, to see that face once more and to know that its charming owner had not disappeared from his horizon forever. She was very gay tonight. Barlow made the mental note that her face was even more beautiful in animation than in repose.

He saw her several times in the weeks which followed until finally his whole life resolved itself into a search for ways and means whereby he could make her acquaintance. Thoughts of her absorbed most of his waking hours and wholly possessed his dreams.

He grew haggard and hollow-eyed. His business began to suffer. One cool evening when he wandered into the Acqua Marine hatted but minus a topcoat and later found himself blocks away, without a hat but wearing a strange topcoat, he decided firmly that something must be done about this strange love madness.

He had driven to the cafe and it was afterward, when he stopped to light a cigaret, that he made his discovery about the topcoat. His first impulse was to return immediately to the Aqua Marine. Then he decided that undoubtedly the owner had left by now and that his one hope of returning the purloined property to its rightful possessor lay in possible identification via the pockets.

A hasty search under a street lamp revealed nothing except a piece of the flap of an old envelope which bore a suburban address. At least that was a tangible clue to work from. Heading his roadster straight for the highway, Barlow made all haste toward the address he had found.

It proved to be a pretty bungalow with a flagstone walk leading from the street to a wide veranda. Disgusted with himself, out of patience with this mental disturbance which he seemed powerless to quell, Barlow rushed up the walk and tugged viciously at the bell. A stolid Scandinavian serving woman answered the summons.

"Mister he bane not home," she insisted in answer to his inquiry, all the while trying vainly to close the door. "Young missus she bane here."

Having contrived to insert his number 11 in the doorway in the beginning, Barlow finally wormed his way into the living room.

"What is it, Hilda?" he heard a soft musical voice saying, and in another moment the girl of his dreams stood before him, her beautiful face clouded with an expression of mingled suspicion and resentment.

"What is it you want?" she asked coldly, turning to her caller.

"We-ll—you see—I—I've brought your husband's overcoat home," Barlow offered lamely, something like an icy hand creeping up to freeze his heart.

"I have no husband," said the young woman with a mild dignity.

Barlow breathed a sigh of relief. He was fumbling for one of his business cards in an inner pocket of his suit coat. All the while his keen mind worked for a gracious way out of the present situation, and subconsciously he was thinking: "But you're going to have a husband, young lady, or my name's not John Barlow."

Cleveland, Ohio.—"I sure recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to any woman in the condition I was in. I was so weak and run-down that I could hardly stand up. I could not eat and was full of misery. A friend living on Arcade Avenue told me about this medicine and after taking ten bottles my weakness and nervousness are all gone. I feel like living again. I am still taking it until I feel strong like before. You may use this letter as a testimonial."—Mrs. Elizabeth Toso, 14913 Halo Ave., Cleveland, Ohio.

SWISSVALE AIDS MILK-ICE FUND

Even the ice man was interested in a lawn fete which Whipple street (Swissvale) children gave last week for the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph Milk and Ice Fund. Indeed, his interest was of a most practical nature, for he donated the necessary ice.

Ten cases of pop were among the merchandise disposed of by the young merchant - philanthropists who included Eleanor, Gurly and Doris Larson, Charles and Rose Marie Fusco, Jean Cochran, Robert, Madeline, Eleanor and James Thwaite, Doris and Roy Linsenmeyer and Priscilla Carr. So successful were the youngsters in soliciting donations and in their merchandising that they have decided to have a second benefit for the fund and its babies at another time.

The fund today is as follows:

Previously reported	$2,154.67

PATRICIA PITT'S SPRIGHTLY COMMENT ON PITTSBURGH'S SOCIAL HAPPENINGS

Even Early Opening of Fall Social Season Fails to Draw Pittsburghers Home From Summer Resorts

I HAD thought that, perhaps, we might get away from the subject of traveling and travelers now that September is with us, but it seems to be impossible. Pittsburghers are a nomadic sort of people, and even when they have lovely summer homes of their own, they like to go about and visit with their friends. And I believe they are staying at their summer places later than they used to—certainly a surprisingly large number of them are still away. Even the exceptionally early beginning of the "season" isn't bringing our folks home—at least not until the last moment.

One visitor who is still away from home is Margaret Carson Thompson, daughter of the E. Franklin Thompsons, of Glen Osborne, who has been staying with the Robert Carsons at their summer place at Southampton. She expects to return home the first of the week, I believe.

Another Sewickley Valleyite, though, has just left for a visit in the East. She is Harriet M. Browne, and she has gone to spend several weeks in Atlantic City and then will go on to Frederick, Md., to visit her sister, Mrs. Edward G. Cunningham, of Green Gate Farm. She will return to Sewickley later, but before coming home I believe she is planning to make a short visit in Oil City.

JUST while we are discussing Sewickley, I might mention that Mrs. David Herbst Campbell, of Walnut and Frederick streets, is giving a tea this afternoon for her four daughters, Ann-Blair, Phoebe, Margaret and Shirley Campbell. The party is being given in the Campbell home, I understand. Perhaps you knew that Ann-Blair is a student at the University of Syracuse. She is leaving soon to enter her second year at school.

* * *

AN interesting date has just been added to the list of fall weddings, I'm told. Katherine Mary Reilly, daughter of the Eugene S. Reillys, of Wightman street, is the bride, and she has chosen October 9 as the date for her marriage to B. Meredith Reid, son of Judge and Mrs. Ambrose B. Reid, of Neville street. The wedding will take place in St. Paul's Cathedral and the hour set is 11 o'clock.

BUT if I may return for a moment to the topic I started with, it seems that New York is attracting its usual quota of local folks. Several Pittsburghers are there now, and at least three that I know of are stopping at the Ambassador. They are Mrs. J. Dawson Callery and her son, George Lewis Callery, of Devonshire street, and Mrs. Donald Scott Rodgers, who also lives in Devonshire street.

ANNOUNCEMENT is made of the marriage of Miss Eva daughter of Mrs. A. Simon, of Beacon street, and Frank I. Tobias, of Los Angeles, which was solemnized Thursday night by the Rev. M. S. The bride is a graduate of the Teachers' Training School and was on the faculty of the McKelvy School.

THE marriage of Miss Ida Mae Kelly, daughter of W. A. Kelly, of Homestead, and Joseph D. Sullivan, of West Homestead, was solemnized Wednesday morning in St. Mary Magdalen's Catholic Church. Kelly and William Kelly, Jr., the bride's brothers. After an eastern motor trip Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan will be at home in Eleventh avenue, Homestead.

BEST IN PITTSBURGH — SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1928 — SEVEN

SPORT COMMENT by JAMES J. LONG

Athletics Win 38 of Their Last 50 Games to Tie Yankees for First Place—Grove May Approach Record of Keefe and Marquard. Pirates Cancel Option on Shortstop Warstler.

Bob Grove

AS has been remarked once or twice, you never can tell in baseball. If anyone had dared to prophesy a couple of months ago that the New York American League club, instead of walking away with the pennant by one of the most absurdly wide margins in history, would find itself tied for first place on the night of September 7, a padded cell would have been put in readiness for him in a hurry.

That's the situation today, however, as a result of yesterday's games. By tossing the Red Sox for a double defeat while the Yanks were being spilled twice by the Senators, Connie Mack's madly-going Athletics swung into a deadlock with the Hugmen for the leadership, and the race that once looked like a hollow mockery has become anybody's fight in which the outcome may remain in doubt almost to the wire.

THAT is, unless one club or the other gains a substantial advantage in the important series of four games at New York that will open with a double-header tomorrow in the presence of perhaps the largest crowd that ever witnessed a baseball attraction. Three out of four would mean a wide edge for either team.

On past form the chances would appear to favor the Hugmen in the big series, as they have beaten the A's 13 times in 18 games this year. But the Athletics of today are different. They have won 38 of their last 50 games, a gait of .760, and stopping a club that is traveling at that clip is no part of a picnic.

THIS is the first time since April 29 that the Yanks have not been in undisputed possession of first place.

As late as July 2 they were leading by the long distance of 13 games, such a seemingly safe margin that they were generally conceded their sixth pennant in eight straight seasons.

INDISPUTABLY, the greatest factor in the remarkable drive of the Mackmen has been Pitcher Bob Grove. The star left-hander may not equal the all-time record of 19 successive victories established by Tim Keefe in 1888 and equaled by Rube Marquard in 1912, but he may closely approach that mark, as his 1-to-0 victory (his second triumph by that score in his last three contests) lengthened his string of decisions to 14 in a row. In the 14 games, all but one of which were full nine-inning performances on his part, he allowed a total of only 23 runs and 93 hits and struck out 71 men.

Connie Mack

GROVE has not lost a game since the Yankees, with Johnson pitching, beat him at Philadelphia on June 27 by a score of 7 to 4. In one of his 14 victories since that date he was reached for four

W. & J. Grid Prospects To Be Reviewed Tomorrow

THE football prospects at Washington and Jefferson College for the 1928 season will be reviewed by Jess Carver in Sunday's Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph. The article will be the third of a series on the leading colleges of the Tri-state district and will be illustrated with photographs from the training camp.

James J. Long's Sports Review of the Week will be another interesting feature.

A compilation of schedules of the leading collegiate elevens of the country also will appear in this issue.

BOOTERS IN ACTION

Two games are on the local soccer card this afternoon. At Westinghouse High School field, the Pittsburgh Rovers meet the Pittsburgh Soccer Club. This might be the only meeting this season, so a good crowd should be on hand. At Swissvale, Union Switch and Signal meets Clan Douglas. Both games start at 3:30 o'clock.

BOOK MEETS HERMES

Much interest will follow the playing of the Book Shoe-Hermes-Grove City League game scheduled for Dean Field this afternoon. With the Dairymen just a half-game ahead of Reliance Life, the Carson aggregation cannot afford to take a chance. It is expected Keenen will twirl for Book Shoe and Snee for Hermes.

OLYMPIC STARS AT STADIUM

PITTSBURGH police, experts in the matter of making arrests, are making a new kind of "pinch" at the Pitt Stadium today by arresting the interest of thousands of sports lovers with one of the biggest and best sports carnivals ever offered here. The event originally was carded as the tenth annual track and field meet of the Bureau of Police, but the program of events achieved such variety and proportions that track and field meet failed, as a descriptive phrase, to do justice to the occasion.

Headlining today's program is the appearance of three of the world's greatest athletes, all United States Olympic stars, in special events. Ray Barbuti of Syracuse, 400-meter dash victor at Amsterdam, and the only American to triumph in an Olympic track event; Bob King of Lima, O., who won the high jump in the international games, and Miss Lillian Copeland of Pasadena, Cal., national record holder in the shot put, discus throw and javelin throw and Olympic games point winner, are the individuals who are to give the police carnival a world championship flavor.

PROGRAM VARIED

Boxing bouts, an aerial circus, a modified marathon run, a tug-of-war and other like events for policemen only, are other attractions which vie with a complete program of men's and women's track and field events for the honor position on the card.

The aerial circus is being put on by Bettis and Rodgers field aviators, flying seven or eight mail and passenger planes.

The modified marathon race was to start at noon from Lake Eliza-

WHEELING COPS OPENER

FAIRMONT, W. Va., Sept. 8.—(AP.)—A pair of home runs by Bill Pritchard, Wheeling backstop, and some loose fielding on the part of Whitehouse, local infielder, played prominent parts in Wheeling's 7-to-5 victory over Fairmont in the opening game of the Mid-Atlantic championship series here yesterday.

Pritchard's first homer, coming after an infield hit and an error, gave the Smokes three runs in the first. Fairmont fought back and scored one run in the first and two in the second to chase Goldstein off

MRS. ELLEN WINS TOURNEY

Mrs. J. A. Ellen, of the Pittsburgh Field Club, captured the one-day tournament of the Women's Golf Association of Western Pennsylvania, held at the Stanton Heights Golf Club yesterday. She had a net 76. The leaders in the two flights follow:

First flight—Mrs. J. A. Ellen, 85-9-76; Miss Anjeannette Hunter, Stanton Heights, 85-5-80; Mrs. H. L. Seaman, Alcoma, 109-20-89; Mrs. F. G. Campbell, Stanton Heights, 88-7-81; Miss Anna Wood, Stanton Heights, 99-18-81.

Second flight—Mrs. F. B. Lockhart, Field Club, 103-20-78; Mrs. T. L. Campbell, Field Club, 103-23-80; Miss Olive Boschert, Stanton Heights, 109-28-81.

Yankees, Macks Tied

NEW YORK, Sept. 8.—(AP.)—Shades of Baker, Barry, Collins and McInnis! Cornelius McGillicuddy's up there again.

After 14 weary years of waiting; of endless experiments with infields that reminded him of that famous million dollar (present values) combination of 1914 only because they were so different; of constant and patient training of youngsters who never quite made the major league grade—after all the bitter disappointments of more than a decade, the tall, taciturn tactician of the Philadelphia Athletics again is on the threshold of the promised land that has eluded him so long.

Right on top of the American League standing are the Philadelphia Athletics today, the first time since 1914 that they've reached the crest at this stage of the season. In that year of the dim baseball past, Connie won the pennant, but lost four straight to the Boston Braves in the world series. Then he broke up his super-team, little knowing how long it would be before he molded together a successor worthy of the name.

True enough, the A's title to the lead is not clear. They hold it on even terms with Miller Huggins' staggering champions, the New York Yankees. But the advantage, for the moment at least, is all in Connie Mack's favor. His A's are coming with a rush. The Yankees are faltering badly, shorn as they are of the overwhelming confidence that was theirs early in July when they had blasted their way to a 13-game lead over the field.

The A's have a golden opportunity today to take undisputed possession of the top. They play two games at Boston, while the Yankees engage in a single game with the Washington Senators. Two victories for the Mackmen, of course, would leave them unchallenged at the top whatever the result of the Senators-Yankees clash.

But regardless of how the clubs stand at the end of these battles, the real climax will come at New York when the A's arrive for a four-game series, starting with a double-header at the Stadium tomorrow. That series may decide the American League pennant.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 8.—Stirred to the action by the two straight defeats sustained by the Pirates in St. Louis, Donie Bush last night declared Glenn Wright would be back in the Buccaneer lineup this afternoon, either at his old position or at second base.

"I am not sure whether Glenn will go to short or second. But he will be in there," declared Bush with emphasis.

Dick Bartell will decorate the bench in order to make room for Wright. Sparky Adams has been playing such remarkable ball at the shortfield post that Bush hesitates to move him from that spot. Wright has never played second base in the big show.

Glenn has not been in action since he and Fred Brickell clashed in a jam-up play in left field in Oakland several weeks ago. Adams was thrown into the shortfield at that time, and his play in the interim has been the talk of the league. Bush also stated Ralston Hemsley would be behind the bat this afternoon.

HOPE FOR EVEN SPLIT

Believed to be practically eliminated from the flag fight, the Pirates reflected on their probable position when the curtain falls on the last day of the month. As they prepared for the third game of the series with the league-leading Cardinals, the Freebooters were ready to contest every inch of ground from now to the end of the race, but the best they can do in the present series is an even split, in view of their setback of yesterday.

McFowler Is Easy Knockout Victor

By HARRY KECK,
Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph Sports Editor.

JIM SIGMAN, of Toledo, erstwhile Navy heavyweight, gave an imitation of an elevator man on duty for a little more than four rounds before Boxing Commissioner Havey Boyle intervened and called a halt to the windup of the open-air boxing show at the Duquesne Steel baseball park last night. Jim, who weighed 214 pounds, was scheduled to travel 10 rounds with Ike McFowler, Negro heavyweight of Johnstown, but proved no match for his 187½-pound opponent, and long before the end of his ups-and-downs act, which consisted of eight trips to the canvas for counts, the crowd had had enough of it.

Sigman was fat and slow and seemingly couldn't hit hard enough to harm a fly. He was good-natured, also, and laughed as he took McFowler's hardest blows and went down from weak taps to assume the oddest postures imaginable, and grin while the referee was practicing arithmetic over him. As soon as the bout was halted he sat in his corner and crossed his legs and smiled his handsomest as his seconds massaged his messed-up countenance. His every action was in the form of comedy relief for his sad fistic showing.

FLOORED EIGHT TIMES

The first round was tame and no damage was done. In the second, McFowler began to get to work on Sigman's body with ripping hooks and uppercuts and hurt him. In the third, a hard left swing to the body doubled up Jim in a neutral corner and he fell across the ropes, seemingly out, but struggled up at the count of eight. An uppercut dropped him for another count of eight. McFowler rushed him as he arose and he went down for a count of two against the ropes. McFowler finishing right and himself as the bell knockdowns, for eight and nine, followed in the fourth round, and, on the last of these, the result of a high right to the body, Sigman made a ridiculous attempt to claim a foul. After two more knockdowns, for eight and nine in the fifth round, a halt was ordered, with two minutes of the round still remaining.

Sigman was so weak an opponent that it was impossible to get a good line on the ability of McFowler, aside from the evidence that he is a good puncher.

A small-sized and chilled crowd turned out for the show, which had been postponed from the night before because of the rain and cold weather.

TAYLOR STOPS WILLIAMS

The preliminaries made up in heated fighting action for what the main bout lacked. The semi-final was the best of the bunch. It was short and sweet. Slambang Harry Taylor, of the North Side, 139¾ pounds, knocking out Howard Williams, Negro, of Swissvale, 140¼, after 1 minute 50 seconds of the second round. They traded swings from the start and in the second round each was on the verge of going out several times before Taylor finally floored Williams for a count of nine and then finished him with another flurry of punches when he arose. On the first knockdown, Williams lay on his back and rested his head on his cupped gloved fists and on the second he lay with his face down and his gloves serving as a pillow. The referee stopped it then without bothering to count.

Joe Louder of Arlington avenue, 149¾ pounds, failed to show his usual class against Leo Kyburski, of Swissvale, 149, in the third bout, and received a bad lacing in six rounds. He was floored and got up dazed at the bell in the second round and never fully recovered, but fought back gamely. In the fourth round both were tired and groggy and either might have gone out. The rugged Kyburski then rallied and finished the stronger of the two and continued to set the pace right down to the final gong.

Battling Gizzy, 131½ pounds, highly-touted youngster of Donora, did a lot of running about the ring and wild swinging in the second bout and received the award over Young Angelo of Swissvale, 125½, who really merited the decision as a result of having forced the fight all the way until Gizzy speeded up in the last round.

Al Waldeck of Tarentum, 131 pounds, won by a technical knockout over Sam Rossi, of Swissvale, 128, in the fourth round, when the bout was stopped to save Rossi from further punishment after he had been dropped for a count of nine and then sent down again. In the preceding round, Waldeck himself was down for a count of seven, after having led the fighting from the opening bell and floored Rossi for seven in the second round. It was a great battle for two youngsters. Al Grayber refereed all of the bouts. The judges were John Graff and Jock Simco.

HARPSTER LOST TO TECH FOR WEEK

By JESS M. CARVER.

THE first rough and tumble football of the 1928 season will be seen in Pittsburgh today. Despite the loss of Capt. Howard Harpster, who will be out of the practice for possibly a week due to an infected foot, Coaches Wally Steffen and Bob Waddell of Carnegie Tech will give the Tartans their first scrimmage this morning.

Sophmore members of the squad will get the most work today, it being the idea of the coaches to get a line on the new men as soon as possible. With the first scrimmage the fight for the various open varsity berths will begin.

Harpster drew a blister on his left foot the second day of practice. He thought little of it but it grew worse and finally a slight infection set in. On the orders of Dr. Mattes, team physician, the stellar quarterback has been ordered to the sidelines.

Coaches Layden and Reagan at Duquesne plan two hard drills for their Dukes today, though they are not yet ready to indulge in any scrimmage. The coaches have divided the big squad into sections. It is possible that the squad may be cut somewhat by a week from now.

PANTHERS WORK

CAMP HAMILTON, Windber, Pa., Sept. 8.—A bolt of lightning struck the Pitt football training camp here yesterday afternoon, and an itemized capitulation of the damage done follows: Toby Uansa, Pug Parkinson, William Walinchus and Charley Edwards, backs on the A squad, which mixed things with the B squad in the first scrimmage of the year, suffered decisive losses on nearly every attempt to advance the ball. A number of glaring blue bruises on various parts of the above mentioned players' anatomies. A defeat for the Panther varsity in its first test of the season.

The bolt of lightning was a 162-pound streak of bone and muscle from Nanticoke. A sophomore center named Eddie Baker, who, although slender of build, can bring down a mad bull with a crashing tackle that can be heard for two city squares.

The A squad, with Donchess and Guarino, ends; Montgomery and Getto, tackles; Capt. Alec Fox and Dinello, guards; Carr, center, and Parkinson, Edwards, Wallnchus and Uansa in the backfield, showed plenty of speed and deception against the B aggregation, with Goldberg and Scanlon on the ends; Corson and Tully, tackles; Crissinger and Ciper, guards; Baker, center, and Wagner, Williams, Wilps and Helsing in the backfield.

THE Pirate management planned to recall Catcher Claude Linton from Decatur at the close of the Three-I League season tomorrow, desiring to have him available in case of injury to Charley Hargreaves or Ralston Hemsley, but the return of the young backstop will be delayed.

Claude Linton.

Decatur won the second half of the Three-I League season and must meet Terre Haute, winner of the first half, in a post-season series of best four out of seven games for the pennant, so the Decatur owners requested that Linton be allowed to stay for that series and President Barney Dreyfuss of the Pirates has consented. It will depend upon the time of Linton's reporting whether he is allowed to go home for the year or is sent East to help the Pirates on their final trip.

MIDSUMMER rumors said that the Pirates would present a new regular this fall or next season in the person of Shortstop Warstler of Indianapolis, but if Warstler comes up to the majors at all, it will be to join some club other than the Bucs. Pittsburgh was given the privilege of buying Warstler in payment for Emil Yde and Roy Spencer, but the option has been cancelled by the Pirate bosses and if Steve Swetonic or any other player is obtained from Indianapolis he will be acquired by direct purchase under new arrangements.

THE Bucs missed another chance to climb back into the first division by dropping the second game of the series in St. Louis yesterday. It was their fifteenth defeat in 20 games played with the Cardinals this year, which means that McKechnie's men have beaten the locals three times in every four meetings on an average.

Bush's ballers were pushed so far behind the leaders by this latest reverse that if the Cardinals were to win only 11 of their remaining 21 games, the Corsairs would have to win every one of their remaining 20 contests to beat them out.

Sparky Adams.

YESTERDAY'S defeat halted Remy Kremer's winning streak, which had been extended to nine straight games. The big Frenchman had not lost an engagement since July 26, when he was driven from the hill in the second inning of a bout at Forbes Field.

Another record went blooey when Sparky Adams fumbled Jess Haines' grounder in the eighth inning after running up the remarkable total of 235 chances accepted at second base and shortstop without a misplay. Adams had not made an error since he toozled in a game at Boston on July 31. In the meantime he played 38 perfect games in succession.

here Wednesday they were seven games behind the Redbirds. Three out of four in the series would have sent the Pittsburghers on their way with the gap considerably closed. But today the figures show them to be nine full games below the leaders, so the Buccos cannot be censured if they start to lay plans to finish as high as second.

AFTER SECOND PLACE

There are four money positions in the major league races, which means that one of the present mathematical contenders for the flag in the Heydler circuit will finish entirely out of the money.

The Buccos would prefer to have it "somebody else."

To carry on today, the Pirates will send Carmen Hill to the mound in opposition to Wee Willie Sherdel. This is the same pair of pitchers who fought it out last Saturday at Forbes Field, with the little southpaw coming out on top.

Sparky Adams' phenomenal fielding streak and Remy Kremer's run of victories were snapped yesterday as the Redbirds fluttered away with a 6-to-3 victory in the second clash of the series. The clever little infielder faltered on his 236th chance in the eighth inning of the contest. Kremer was out after a tenth consecutive victory when he was measured for a setback.

The manner in which Adams erred was unusual. Runners were on third and first, with two out and Jess Haines at bat. Jimmy Wilson, on first, dashed toward the middle bag as Kremer pitched to Haines. The hit-and-run play apparently was on, and Jess whacked the ball back past Kremer and straight toward little Sparky, who was within a few feet of the middle bag.

Adams reached for the ball, but it continued into center, much to the surprise of Sparky and his mates.

The sterling infielder accepted 235 chances without a slip at short and second in 39 games, according to available figures. Nobody seems to have possession of any record figures on the point over a long stretch of years, and if they were available they probably would not cover two positions.

Who Started the World War?

In his vivid and sparkling narrative

Five Tragic Weeks

he reaches the following conclusions:

1—All nations are without guilt, for none desired a war.

2—Some governments are accessories in guilt because they either wanted war or did nothing to prevent it.

3—This participation in guilt refers to some of the cabinets of both fighting parties and cannot be weighed in percentage.

4—For decades Austria and Russia have disturbed the peace of Europe, so naturally the cabinets and their satellites in Vienna and St. Petersburg were for war; next came their old allies in Berlin and Paris, and after a considerable time the London cabinet followed suit.

5—When anyone wants to protect his own people from the charge that they have broken the peace of the world, he must reveal, without regard for anyone's feelings, all the mistakes of a government which was overthrown at the end of the war as the atonement of these people.

6—The theory that Germany was alone guilty is just as unthinkable as the theory that Germany was without guilt. Therefore, the Versailles Treaty is built upon a false claim.

THREE SHOT DOWN AT SAVE-UNION MEETING

The Prince of Wales ~ His Story.

Given Many Receptions and Sees Unique Sights in Tour of India

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE:

His Royal Highness, Edward, Prince of Wales, heir to the British throne, was born in midsummer of 1894. Guilty of much mischief during his childhood days, he was often punished. When he grew older he was sent to Osborn Naval College and later to Oxford for his university education. During the World War he became a captain in the army and went to France, but was not permitted to get into the actual fighting. After the war he made his first tour of Canada and then visited the United States. Later he toured Australia, India and Japan.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

"Edward P."

By WALTER AND LEONARD TOWNSEND

THE Prince spent three days at Lucknow, during which time he "converted" the disloyal faction, and proved that he had no connection with their grievances. Before his departure these selfsame natives who had vowed to wreck the tour were cheering as enthusiastically and fervently as the patriotic overseas men.

PRINCE OF WALES

Despite his heavy engagements the Prince was able to turn to the lighter side of life in Lucknow. He often figured at race meetings and actually rode winners on two occasions.

"Games played in the right way," the Prince declared to the students of King George's Medical College, Lucknow, "develop those very qualities which we must closely associate with the term. . . . The combination of points in a true sportsman must be seasoned with the spice of determination and courage.

But not all the Prince's hours were spent at work in India, he rode almost daily and also enjoyed the exhilarating sports of pig-sticking, duck shooting, horse racing, big game shooting, paper chasing and polo.

H. R. H. saw much in India which to him was novel. For instance, on one occasion he was astonished to see some natives dancing on red-hot cinders, who then presented themselves to the Prince to prove that they had not sustained any burns. He also witnessed performances by sword-swallowers and the native jugglers.

At Lucknow, great anxiety was felt both for the success of the tour and for the Prince's personal safety. Already it had been declared in certain quarters that deliberate plans had been made to spoil the royal visit. Rumors had reached the Prince's ears, but nevertheless he insisted upon carrying out his program to the letter. His arrival at Lucknow was greeted by a mixture of loyalty and passive indifference.

Gets Numerous Presents

The Prince was received by the Governor and various other high officials and it was noticed as the day progressed that enthusiasm for his presence increased instead of diminished, even in those quarters where, earlier in the day, there had been sullen silence. Another triumph for the Prince was when, at the Gaekwar of Baroda's party in his honor, Hindoos of every caste mingled together in a united attempt to welcome the Prince.

During his journeys through India, the Prince grew more and more attracted by the life of the country.

All India set itself to give the Prince a good time. Banquets followed banquets with dances to follow. In the daytime engagements occupied every hour and except during his sleeping hours the Prince had very little time to himself. At each stage of his journey he accumulated presents and souvenirs and these became so numerous that they could not be carried on the royal train and had to be dispatched to Bombay for shipment in the Renown. It was, of course, impossible for the Prince to refuse these gifts which ranged from an elephant to a diamond encrusted sword.

As one Indian Prince remarked at a banquet

"East and West
The Prince brings rest!"

The peculiarities of the Indian natives did not in any way dismay the Prince. He was able to make allowance for things he did not understand. At the same time, however, he made them see his side of the picture by a wonderful combination of winning friendliness, tact, sympathetic understanding and appreciation of their treasured customs.

Bags First Tiger

At Benares the young Prince was greeted loyally by the crowds. Dense masses followed him to the building of the Hindoo University which the Prince had consented to open officially. During the ceremony the degree of Doctor of Letters was bestowed upon him.

The Prince has always had a great interest in modern education. Recently he subscribed 500 pounds towards a fund for providing facilities for teaching natural science in the school of Christ's Hospital.

It was whilst in India that the Prince shot his first tiger. Immediately after the termination of his engagements in Benares, the Prince was the guest of Maharaja Sir Chandra Shumshere Jung at a big game hunt in Nepal. Then, his short holiday over, the Prince visited in turn Patna, Bihar and Orison before proceeding to historical Calcutta.

Calcutta was a success! After attending the Indian New Year procession he was unable to get away owing to the enthusiasm of the crowds.

After Calcutta the Prince journeyed to Burma on board the R. I. M. S. "Dufferin." The happy Burmese erected him enthusiastically and arranged a special comic pageant for him of mock elephants, lions, tigers, giraffs and goat.

In Burma the Prince walked among the people with perfect freedom and when he left he sent a radio message to the Governor, Sir Reginald Craddock. . . "Please assure the people of Burma of my gratitude and my affection for them . . . It is with deep regret that I leave."

Proises Ruler

At Madras the Prince received a royal reception before putting in some busy hours at Bangalore, Mysore, Krish-Narajasagra, Hyderabad, where the Nizam gave in his honor perhaps the most magnificent bouquet throughout the tour.

The Prince pronounced Bhopal a good "spot." The Begum of Bhopal is the only woman ruler in Asia, and the Prince paid a warm tribute to her services to the women of her country.

Gwalior gave the Prince a warm greeting and then before visiting Delhi, the Prince stayed at Agra to see the immortal Taj Mahal.

In the course of one of his speeches at Delhi, the Prince of Wales gave a rather mordant opinion of some tourists. "There are, I believe, some persons who come from England, and after spending even fewer weeks than I have in this country give their valuable views and impressions about India to the public. You must not expect me tonight to disturb their monopoly; I am content for the present to remain a reverent student of the many wonderful things which the book of India has to unfold."

Among the Indian princes who welcomed the Prince was Ranjit Sinhji, the cricketer whose opinion of the Prince was: "The lovable, the tactful, the experienced ambassador of fellow-feeling and friendship between all the scattered parts of the empire."

Goes to Japan

The Prince had been studying Hindustani during his tour and managed a little speech in this language when he presented colors to the Sixteenth Rajputs.

The tour thoroughly exhausted the Prince so that when the time came for him to visit Lahore, he was advised to cancel this part of the tour. His answer cannot be given better than by explaining that he had a magnificent reception there to the great wonder of the agitators.

The Prince visited an Indian Fair while in the neighborhood of Lahore. Despite the political unrest which was perhaps more marked in Lahore than elsewhere in India, the Prince mingled freely with the natives. From his pavilion the Prince witnessed the festivities got up in his honor, which consisted chiefly of tug-of-wars, wrestling matches, acrobatic performances and feats with trained animals. There were also weird round-abouts, fireworks, cinema shows and exhibitions of native dances.

Peshawar, the Khyber Pass, Rawal Pindi, Kapurthala, all were visited, and then the Prince reached Karatchi where he boarded the "Renown" for Colombo to enjoy a game or two of polo after he had completed his long list of engagements.

The Indian tour had been an arduous one, but the indefatigable Prince of Wales proceeded onward to Japan to be received with the greatest possible welcome. During his short stay the Prince made a firm friend of the Prince Regent.

When the Prince landed home towards the end of June, 1922, it was with the knowledge that he had completed an almost impossible task for, single-handed, he had truly knit India a thousand times more firmly to Britain.

POSTMASTER, 65, KILLS 74-YEAR-OLD YEGG

FAYETTEVILLE, W. Va., Sept. 8.—(AP.)—Shooting at two postoffice robbers from a corner where he had wriggled loose from robbers' bonds, a 64-year-old postmaster, it developed yesterday, killed a long-bearded 74-year-old man, declared a yegg, and is believed to have wounded an accomplice.

Sherman Bowyer, the postmaster, did not know he had killed the intruder until daylight when the body was found near the combination country store and post office.

The dead man was identified as James Murphy, a former resident of Pennsylvania. He had two masks in his pockets, along with a few coins and mine pay checks believed to have been obtained in the store. No clues were found that might serve to identify the dead man's companion.

Bowyer was overpowered while asleep in his bedroom at the rear of the post office. The men tied him and then began working on the safe. They carried a quantity of explosives.

They were so interested in their work they failed to notice that Bowyer had loosened his bonds and obtained a revolver. He fired several shots at the men who fled through the front door.

Backs Air Route to Capital

The Pittsburgh business men who have been endeavoring to induce the postal authorities to provide an air mail route from Pittsburgh to Baltimore and Washington have gained the support of Congressman Clyde Kelly, of Pennsylvania, who announced yesterday that he had recommended the establishment of such a route to the postmaster-general.

Kelly is a member of the House Post Office Committee.

He also urged the establishment of an air mail line from Pittsburgh to St. Louis, proposing that postmasters along the proposed routes submit to the postmaster general the probable quantity of air mail available in their districts.

Several weeks ago a group of Pittsburghers conferred with postal officials in Washington, taking with them from Pittsburgh signatures of several thousand persons who favored the establishment of the Pittsburgh-Washington-Baltimore route. The postal heads said they regarded the project favorably.

MEET MISS MERCER

MARY VAN NATTA

"Miss Mercer, 1928," the little girl selected to reign over the festivities next week to celebrate Mercer's one hundred and twenty-fifth birthday, is Mary Van Natta, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Francis Van Natta and a student at Edinboro (Pa.) Teachers' College.

3 SHOT IN FIGHT AT LABOR MEET

BENTLEYVILLE, Pa., Sept. 8.—Louis Carboni, 40, who police say shot three men who tried to oust him as chairman of a miners' meeting last night, is being sought today by State police, county detectives and local authorities.

Carboni, an officer of the local Save-the-Union group of miners, was badly beaten by friends of the victims before he made good his escape. The shooting occurred in a miners' hall here.

George Moran, 40; Carl Glovak, 55, and his son, Theodore, 20, all of Bentleyville, are the victims. They are in the Washington Hospital, where is was said that Moran and the elder Glovak had been wounded seriously. Moran is constable of Bentleyville borough.

Moran and the elder Glovak are said to have been leaders in a movement to oust Carboni as chairman, and when they voiced their demands Carboni refused. The dispute grew in intensity and Moran then is said to have threatened to arrest Carboni. The shooting followed. Carboni, police say, first shot Moran and Glovak and started to leave the hall. The younger Glovak attempted to stop him and he, too, was shot.

Carboni fled to the office of Burgess I. N. Smith, but the crowd followed him into the office and attacked him. He was badly beaten before he fled through a rear door.

A Mystery; Name Him!

RECOGNIZE HIM?

Honestly, now, if you were asked, could you tell the name of the traffic patrolman on your corner, the one who speaks to you when you pass by? The Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph, if you can't, will help you a bit. Each day there is published the photograph of one of the city's traffic officers. Here is one for today. His name Monday!

YESTERDAY'S "TRAFFIC COP" WAS JAMES MURRAY, MARRIED, 412 KNOX AVENUE, WHO HAS BEEN STATIONED AT THE CARNEGIE LIBRARY CROSSING, SCHENLEY PARK, FOR SIX YEARS. HE HAS BEEN POLICING 24 YEARS.

WARNING WORD HEEDED; CONSTABLES RUSH REPORTS

Derelict constables, who had failed to file their quarterly reports are now stampeding to the office of District Attorney S. H. Gardner. Twenty-two who had been delinquent in filing returns, appeared yesterday and a like number made a frontal attack on the county prosecutor's office today. Eighteen are still unaccounted for and they will be given until next week to make returns.

Constable Herman Funk, Braddock township, was the only one to break the monotony of the blind men's parade. He reported five alleged cases of moonshine selling, of which he said four had been held for court.

'Evidence' Is Carried To Clark

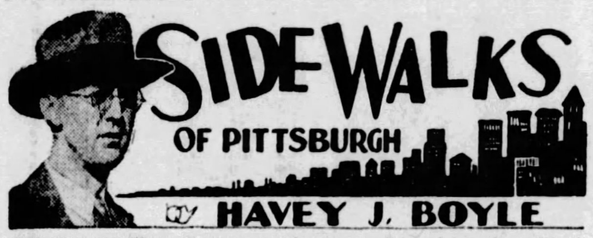
Reports that moonshine was being sold next door to Center Avenue police station were submitted to Public Safety Director James M. Clark yesterday by the Rev. A. V. B. Hightower, Negro pastor, of the Hill district.

The director asked for evidence, and the minister promptly pulled bottles of whisky from his pockets, with maps showing location of speakeasies, and offered to produce the buyers of the evidence.

LAWRENCE GRAND JURY RECOMMENDS NEW JAIL

NEW CASTLE, Pa., Sept. 8.—A new court house and a new jail, with ample parking facilities for both, were recommended by the September grand jury yesterday. The recommendations are a step further than those made by previous juries, which many times have asked for a new court house, but never mentioned the need of a new jail. The jury also recommended a bridge over the Mahoning River at Willow Grove.

SIDEWALKS OF PITTSBURGH



by HAVEY J. BOYLE

PITTSBURGH'S rich historical background has been the subject of many a column, local and national, in newspapers and in bound volumes. The city is filled with points where Washington ate, slept, walked, rode and fought. There are numerous streets named after characters of the pre-Revolutionary period, at the time when the English and the colonists fought side by side against the French and the Indians.

That hilly street that runs from the facade of the Fifth Avenue High School up to Center avenue was named after Gov. Dinwiddie, of Virginia. He was the Governor who sent young Washington out this way to straighten things out and perhaps on that account the street running off Fifth was dedicated to him. But how those Dinwiddie street residents must blush when they hear that the street they live on was named after a gentleman who besides sending Washington here, in a moment of extreme carelessness misappropriated about $250,000 of the government's money and had to be recalled to England.

JUMONVILLE street residents come off much better. Their street was named after a Frenchman who was killed fighting Washington. There is a little scandal about that, too. Some of the French historians reported that Washington assassinated Jumonville. The English and American histories deny this. The French story is that Jumonville was shot in the act of either arranging a truce with or surrendering to Washington. In reading these various stories the sympathy of the American, naturally, is with the story that Jumonville was shot down in battle.

Gist street was named after Christopher Gist, who knew this district so well he acted as a guide to Washington. It is with great restraint that we decline to say that Christopher gave Washington the gist of the local situation. To say that would be to make a very bad pun, which is considered the lowest of wit. Anyway, he didn't pronounce his name that way.

* * *

WE ARE sorry we can't recall the name of the gentleman who at Fort Duquesne had a miserable time the day the French and Indians went out to meet Braddock. He was a prisoner and noting that the Indians were backward about going out to meet Gen. Braddock, he concluded his side would win if there were a fight and even if there were no fight he would be rescued by Braddock. He saw the French commander plead with the Indians, but they were quite indifferent. At last he said he'd go out without the mean old Indians and this made the Indians feel sorry so they went out to fight an uneven battle. Braddock in that fight against the French and Indians suggested a battle today between the New York Yankees and the Philadelphia Nationals. The experts were baffled that day as the Phils, so to speak, shut out much stronger Yankees.

* * *

The prisoner was dismayed to find the Indians coming back with many a scalp. All night they made whoopee after the battle and as a discomforting climax to a bad day the prisoner saw some of his compatriots burned at the stake by the Indians.

* * *

THERE were pretty romances, too, in those days—good topics for an Indian opera. Some of the white settlers, captured and made to live with the Indians, resisted rescue like the well-known dickens. There was many a girl who, enamoured of a gallant brave, just refused to be rescued.

* * *

You can see from the way we have named dates and names that history was our favorite study in school.

SANTA MONICA, Cal., Sept. 8.

I got a wire today from Tex Rickard. He has booked the fellow that won the Olympic Marathon to come over here and race. And Tex wants to book him with Andy Payne, of Claremore, Okla., best medium-priced town in America.

Andy is the boy from home that won the foot and mouth race from Beverly to Claremore.

Why, Tex's man only run 26 miles. Andy used to run that far every morning limbering up just to get ready to run 60 or 80 miles each day for a whole summer.

Besides, I am going to make a Tunney champion out of him. I got him reading Shakespeare, and told him not to meet anybody that was not his equal. So we can't be monkeying with some foreigner.

Yours, WILL.

Diana Prepares for Party To Which Benny Black Has Been Invited

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE

On his first day in Manor Park, where he is to apply the business methods learned in college, Benjamin Carrington Black has occasion to observe three of the suburban town's most alluring examples of femininity. Unnoticed by men, he sees Diana Rand—nineteen and pretty, enter a jewelry store with her friend, Beatrice Shelton, whose trailing dress is reminiscent of the Gay Nineties. In the store Diana and Bea encounter Ann Evarts, a trim, petite person. Ann in Diana's roadster sees Noddy and Toddy and Norman Gregory and leaves Diana and Beatrice to join them. Bea is furious as she and Diana drive away. She is madly in love with Gregory. Norman hears about Benny being in Manor Park and looks him up. He locates him and invites him to the Yacht Club.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

A SIMPLE process, dressing. Pulling up stockings of such nude filminess that her legs seemed quite bare after they were on, thrusting small feet into tiny girl slippers with heels like stilts; sliding dexterously into a straight little bodice which hung from narrow shoulder straps and ended in a pair of trunks above her knees—cloth of gold this was and required no undergarment. Then she fastened on a yellow chiffon skirt all fluted ruffles like a ballet dancer's with a great bunch of yellow roses at the side.

A dab of powder while 20 Dianas dabbing their noses mocked her in the mirrors, an adoring pause before the dancing girl; then a swoop toward a wrap of orange velvet and she was gone as her 20 reflections, every one gay, laughing, frankly enjoying her own dazzling charm, flitted away on pursuits of their own.

Twinkling down the hall she paused to listen a moment before playing a laughing bit of tatoo on a panel with her knuckles. Not like her own, the room she enterd. Millicent Rand loved old rose and dull blue and French furniture, surrounding herself with artistic effects but conventional ones. Now she was seated at her dressing table, a mature version of her daughter, taller, a bit less vivacious, but so youthful that the two might have been sisters.

Diana, romping in blithely as on some happy breeze, would have kissed the smooth cheek turned her way had not Suzette, mending a bit of torn lace at the back of the old woman's gown, made a warning gesture with her needle.

So the girl touched her hand to her lips and blew a buttrfly kiss while Millicent said, "How lovely you are!"

"How lovely YOU are, darling!"

They beamed at each other and Diana began to pick at the table, sniffing the perfumes, trying a drop of each, finally reading the label etched in silver on a black container shaped like a vase.

"'Caresse d'Amour,'" she mused and giggled. "Kiss of love!" She shook her head, drawing her mouth down through the gray eyes brimmed with fun. "Ah—poor dad!"

They laughed together, mother and daughter, and Millicent, freed now of the maid's restraining touch, turned the girl about, smoothing back a dark curl, running a powder puff over the slim, young back.

They kissed each other and Diana hurried away; tripped down the stairs and into the library. There she found her father surrounded by Noddy and Toddy and Norman Gregory, the four in the act of raising cocktails to their lips.

"Hey!" she called from the door. "Where's mine?"

"Better hurry, Princess! Well, then—" Seymour Rand filled another glass and Diana perched upon the side of his chair, flinging a arm about his neck and holding her glass high.

"Daddy—our toast!" A bit of a rite they had repeated many times together this was; their manner became ceremonious, almost solemn as she proposed the toast: "To myself—I have to live with myself until I die—so may I always like—myself!"

They drank and Norman, grinning, declared it to be the most conceited toast that ever he had heard. "Wait till you're married, Di. You won't be so fresh then!"

The girl cocked a whimsical eye at his good-natured disapproval and shook her head. "Is it a proposal?" she demanded. "Oh, Dad—this is so sudden!"

She put her face on her father's broad shoulder and winked at the boys, chuckling. "Watch your step, young fellow. She'll waltz you to the altar before you know what's happened."

"I'll risk that, sir."

"Better not. She's set in her ways. If I were you—" He made a gesture of great caution and Diana, catching it, brushed her palm across his mouth. But the glance which passed between them was warm with understanding. "I know what the toast means and like it." his look seemed to say. "And I know you know and it's all I want," her look returned.

But now Noddy and Toddy were edging closer; they exclaimed almost together: "About marrying, you know—well, how about us?"

Diana laughed, waved them back. "You two! I wish one of you would wear a red waistcoat so I could tell you apart. . . . C'mon, boys—time to go—"

She kissed her father, rumpled his hair, gave his ear a tweak. "See't you get mother in before I come home, Dad—you hear?"

"Wouldn't disobey you for worlds, Princess. But do try to look in for breakfast, my dear. Goodby—" Goodbys all in chorus; Diana's tossed backward like bright bubbles, hanging in the air a moment to scintillate and break in small crashes of merriment. "Good-night, sir," from the boys, more restrained but no less carefree. A whirl, a flash of gold and orange, a pattering of feet—the outer door banged—she was gone, taking a certain something with her, a young exuberance like rare wine to Seymour Rand. . . .

He stood there looking at the place where she had been, in his eyes the love and tenderness and admiration which had been in the face of Diana's mother a little time before.

CHAPTER IV.

BEATRICE and Freddie met in the hallway outside their rooms and paused there, staring at each other, cowering away from the stairs. The girl held a long cape tightly about herself; it was a dull shade of gray, eminently sensible and woefully unbecoming and above it her face looked drawn and pale with no rouge and her hair caught tightly into the knot at her neck.

Beneath the cape the hem of her dress showed; this, too, was gray but of a gentle tint which might have been sweetly youthful but for the middle-aged length of skirt and the high throat line.

However Freddie regarded his sister with a comprehending leer. Stepping to her side he jerked the wrap and surprisingly revealed the truth. No sleeves, practically no back to the gown, it consisted almost exclusively of the front panel which was the bodice and the long skirt.

"And you'll get rid of that skirt before you let Norman see you," he predicted. "Say, what the devil you looking like that for? I'm not going to give you away you little chump! Think I like to see you imitating last year's almanac?" He drew the gray folds over her shoulders, giving her a clumsy pat and she clung to his arm in a shrinking dread.

"They're waiting for us, Freddie. Suppose Mother says something—"

"Leave that to me. Getting so you jump at shadows, kid. Can't do more than blow you up, can they?"

"But, Freddie—"

"Sure—it's rotten. Why don't you give old Norm a chance?"

"Oh!" Tears ran into her eyes and he stood by, bored and restless till she wiped them away and followed him down to the drawing room. Here were Jeremiah Sheldon and his wife, alert and menacing as prejudiced judges sitting upon the Case of the Younger Generation. The identical suspicion of life which gleamed from the probing eyes of her husband was in the face of Deborah Sheldon; she, too, was angular, though taller than the little man by head and shoulders, and given to black frocks, black hair dye and a toothy smile.

It so happened that Diana and her escorts had come in, and Beatrice drew a breath of relief as her eyes flew to Norman, held his gaze a moment and then shifted away while red crept up her cheeks.

There were no cheery greetings, however; even Diana was subdued in this enormous room half drowned under the massive shadows of old-fashioned black walnut and dreary with too little color, too little light.

"Well, children," Jeremiah began oratorically.

They said, "Yes, Father," and their heads turned like machines set to perform in unison.

"I've no need," interrupted Deborah, "to remind you that you are Sheldons. You will, I trust behave as such."

"Yes, mother." The heads came around to her.

"And that there will be no flat tires tonight," croaked Jeremiah as the heads turned back to him. "You brought your sister home disgracefully late the last time, Freddie."

"Yes, father. But you see, sir—"

"That will do. In my day we did as we were told and found no cause for excuses. This generation of highty-tighty youth—h'rrumph!"

The heads were gyrating between the elder Sheldons, ducking first at one, then at the other; Diana swallowed a giggle and contrived to kick the nearest ankle. It proved to be Noddy's and he flushed scarlet and gave himself up to a fit of choking.

Mrs. Sheldon glared at Diana—at the cape she wore over one shoulder, her close-cropped shining little head, the amazing lack of covering above her waist and the equally amazing brevity of covering below. Ostentatiously she crossed to her own daughter, inspected the high line of her gown with approval and drew the wrap tightly together at the girl's throat.

"I hope my little daughter never will fail to be a lady," she remarked.

"No, mother—"

There was a movement of departure then. Freddie kissed his mother while Beatrice fearfully pecked at her father's cheek. But Deborah was not through. With a show of graciousness she bent down to Diana, kissed her, straightened up quickly, eyes snapping.

"Wanted to see if I'd had a drink, the old grouch!" Diana told herself. And because the action aroused every instinct of mischief within the small girl, she led the crowd out, humming the Dead March under her breath.

"Dum, dum, da dum—" went the dismal strain, softly yet distinctly and in a tempo which every foot must mark and respond to. Noddy and Toddy laughed openly; even Norman kept his face down till they were safely outside and Beatrice protesting, "Oh, Di, why did you? They'll be furious!"

"Shucks, Bea—do them good." Diana gave her friend a little hug and told her to cheer up. "You won't have to stand it always," she whispered. Norman's waiting back there in his car. Better run off with him tonight, dear."

To the others, Freddie was saying bitterly, "Sorry we had to bring you into our morgue. Well—everybody set?" He saw Norman helping his sister into one of the three cars on the drive and his look swept the house. Beatrice was supposed to ride with him and if they happened to be watching . . . But there was no sign of that and he sprang into the second car, calling softly to Diana who was with Noddy and Toddy that he would go for Ann.

"Right!" they shouted as the engines roared. "Cherrio! Bye-ee-eee!" Their voices grew faint and died under the trees.

CHAPTER V.

IN the tiny bedroom where only the faintest of June breezes penetrated the high, narrow window, Ann Evart slept as calmly, sweetly as a child. Very much like a small and especially winsome angel she looked with her pale hair spread on the pillow, one thin arm thrown about her head, slender, dainty limbs relaxed.

Hanna stole in and stood for a long moment looking down at the delicate little creature so much the copy of what she, herself, had been a very long while ago. And there was tenderness in the woman's face. Hard she might be, ruthless in her ambition, but she was doing the best she knew according to her lights.

She wanted for Ann what would have meant happiness for herself and if the struggle were difficult, even sordid, she was willing to carry on. Her sacrifice might not have been considered noble by those qualified to judge but they constituted her gesture toward nobility. Ann must fare better than her mother had fared. And, of course, if her own position were improved through the process, that was all right. Something due her, certainly.

She was glad the girl slept. She would be fresh for the evening and besides it brought temporary peace here; cessation of the bickering eternally waged between them.

Hanna tiptoed back to her own room and, first making sure the door was fastened, unlocked a drawer and took from it a small eletric grill together with a bottle of milk, a loaf of bread and wee packages of butter and chipped beef. With the expertness of long practise and by a process which would have astonished the chef in the hotel kitchen downstairs, she contrived two portions of creamed chipped beef on toast and placed these on cheap crockery plates, heaping the one and reserving the merest trifle for the the other which was to be her own.

She awakened the sleeper then. "Come and eat your dinner while it's hot. See—everything ready and a glass of milk for you besides. Feeling all right, baby? No headache?" With an anxious study of the girl.

Ann sat down yawning and made a grimace at the place. "I won't feel so good after that. Oh, mother, what's the use? I'm tired of all this fussing and fretting and nothing ever happening. Crawling to those snips—taking their snubs, dragging invitations out of folks who don't want me—I'm tired of it I say. I'm going to stay home tonight."

Buds and Blossoms -:- By Madge Geyer

THE garden of the world—filled with tiny buds and beautiful blossoms. Some gay and bonny, others dark and glowing, but each loveliest of all to their loved ones.

Particularly when Dan Cupid starts the round to pick the blossoms for his own Garden of Love.

When the buds first start to open and show their gleaming petals, he watches and waits and long before they're full-blown, he has already made a place for them.

And Love gathers them all so tenderly and watches over them with such pride that nothing may happen to mar their beauty—for the buds and blossoms of life are the flowers which deck the Garden of Love, and Love's care is the tenderest in the world.

The Princess Tells of Her Reception in America

"I'VE never known such loyalty as Anna and Henry have given me," Princess Olina, of Transvania declared, and I nodded an involuntary assent, remembering the dog-like look in the eyes of the dour old man in the room down the hall when he had gazed at his young mistress.

"They started for New York almost as soon as they received my letter," she went on. "Luckily, Henry is really a rich man, and as they have no children they feel that they can spend their money as they please. They never would spend much themselves, but for me, they would pour it out like water. However, I have had plenty so far. They only have had the expense of their trip to New York. But I know they are standing back of me whenever I need it—only I—do—hope I won't need it. I can't bear to think of—"

She broke off abruptly, a quick frown drawing down her lovely eyebrows. She must be getting near the end of her money, I told myself, with a sudden stab of pity for the girl who was so gallantly jousting with Fate for her freedom.

"One of the maids of our suite at the hotel was persuaded to bring Anna to me without anyone else knowing about it," she went on hurriedly in a patent attempt to dwarf the importance of her last sentence. "Anna was terribly frightened at first when I told her what I wanted, but she knew Albert's reputation better than I, and when I convinced her that nothing else but disappearing could save me from him, she was ready to do anything I asked of her.

"I wanted to have my cake and eat it too, as you say in this country, so I resolved not to disappear until the very end of the trip. Anna and Henry, as Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln took rooms at a small, old-fashioned, reasonably priced hotel in an out-of-the-way corner of the city. They told the clerk that they would later be joined by a niece, and then Henry commenced the search for a man, a friend of his boyhood, who he knew had come to this country and become a surgeon. How Henry persuaded him, I don't know. I am sure he wasn't the kind of man who could be bribed, but perhaps he was sorry for me. At any rate he managed the hospital end of the affair, so that everything was in readiness for my adventure when the time came.

"But, oh! that trip through your country! I never had such a wonderful time in my life! I dream about it almost every night, and lie awake hours thinking about it. But you know all about that part of it, don't you?"

"I read a great deal about it," I said. "I never saw any part of your marvelous reception, for I do not like crowds."

She shot a quick shrewd glance at me, and I wondered if she guessed how distasteful to me and to many other conservative people had been the frequent exhibition of flamboyant almost servile adulation to royalty which that tour had brought forth. To forestall her comment, I asked a quick, abrupt question.

"What part of it all did you like best?"

"Oh! New York!" She glowed. "The theaters, the restaurants, the night clubs! You see while my father and mother were attending the formal functions, the rest of us, of course under adequate chaperonage, were allowed to see New York—and we saw it—you may be sure of that. And the place I'll remember longest was that night club when I first saw Noel and heard him play. I never heard anybody, even the great masters, who could saw your heart right in two with a violin bow the way Noel can. Isn't her wonderful.

HOW TO KEEP WELL by Royal S. Copeland M.D.

U.S. Senator From New York

Oedema of the Legs Sometimes Inherited

A WINNIPEG reader asks for an article on "oedema in the legs." Reference is made to something I prepared about oedema of the lungs and with it comes this request.

DR. COPELAND

There is an unusual form of oedema called "Milroy's disease." This is a persistent and apparently inherited condition, involving the lower limbs. The rest of the body is not affected, but the legs are constantly swollen.

Any condition in which there is marked swelling of the tissues may be described as oedema. An attack of giant hives has localized oedema as the chief outward symptom.

The swelling of the feet, ankles and lower portions of the legs is known to doctors as "oedema." This is a rather familiar symptom in women of middle age.

Milroy's disease is of different origin, indeed it is not known what really is the cause of it. But out of 97 persons, representing six generations of the same family, there were 22 men and women who had this obstinate symptom.

Almost always, in the ordinary type of oedema, there is something wrong with the heart, kidneys or blood vessels. It need not be something particularly serious, but there is just enough disturbance to produce the trouble.

For instance, in chronic inflammation of the kidneys there may be slight puffiness of the ankles. There is likely to be more swelling in acute inflammation of the kidneys. But in the latter condition there is almost always marked dropsy. This is an early symptom, but it is shown more in the abdominal cavity than in the legs.

What you should do about such swellings is consult your family doctor. He will test the urine to make sure there is no kidney involvement. If there is found to be, early treatment will correct it.

Sometimes a weak heart may have swelling of the legs as one of its signs. What we call "cardiac insufficiency," a failure of muscular power in the heart, may be responsible.

The oedema or dropsy due to this cause disappears almost at once when proper medication is given. Of course, pronounced cases require more heroic treatment, but that is not what we have in mind today.

Sometimes overindulgence in salt causes the taking of excessive quantities of water and other fluids. It would be well to reduce the use of common salt.

There are cases where there appears to be a natural weakness of the blood vessels of the lower limbs. Swelling is not unusual then. The wearing of high shoes or occasional periods of rest with elevation of the feet may help a lot.

But as I have said, let your doctor examine you, test the urine and then advise. He will decide what is needed in your particular case.

Answers to Health Queries

V. B. Q.—Have had a heart affection and my legs and arms, hands and feet are swollen. What would you advise?

A.—Follow your doctor's advice. The swelling is due to the heart condition.

* * *

D. E. K. Q.—I have frequent backache and pains in the chest—what is the cause?

2.—What can I do to gain in weight?

A.—Constipation and poor digestion would be apt to cause such symptoms. Keep the system clear and see whether or not you notice results.

2.—Build up your health in general and you will not only gain in weight but benefit generally.

* * *

R. M. S. Q.—Is conjunctivitis of the eyes caused by high blood pressure? What is glaucoma?

A.—No. Glaucoma is an eye condition caused by increased pressure within the eyeball, causing too much fluid, which cannot find a way to escape. This condition should always have careful medical attention. The blood pressure may play a part in this condition.

* * *

J. P. Q.—How can I prevent gas from forming in my stomach?

2.—How can superfluous hair be removed?

A.—This condition is probably due to hyperacidity, an acid condition of the stomach. This should be corrected.

2.—Superfluous hair may be removed by the use of the electric needle. The work must be done by an expert skilled in this particular line. A special bleach will make the hair less conspicuous.

* * *

R. E. W. Q.—What do you advise for a dry skin?

A.—Dry yourself well after washing and apply a good pure cold cream. Your neighborhood druggist will gladly suggest a suitable cream.

Sayings of Mrs. Solomon

By HELEN ROWLAND

WHY MEN ARE "POPULAR"

VERILY, my Daughter, a woman knoweth when she is a "dud" amongst men. But where wilt thou find a man who doubteth his charm for women?

* * *

For, lo, every man secretly believeth himself irresistible when he maketh a grand stand play. And wherefore shall any man question his sex appeal, so long as damsels continue to require dancing partners and to seek husbands?

* * *

Now, behold, in Babylon, there dwelt three bachelors, who were called "popular."

* * *

And the first of these was "Good Fellow," and he was known in the Land as Spender. And wheresover he went, women followed after him and filled him with praises and applesauce, and hung garlands upon his door.

HELEN ROWLAND

But, lo, there came a day when the money ran out of his pockets and the champagne ran out in his cellar. And even as these departed, so the women who had flattered and petted him, departed with them.

* * *

For many a man that looketh like Prince Charming through the bottom of a wine glass, looketh like a Mistake through a glass of ginger ale.

* * *

Now the second bachelor was full of sportiness, and was known as "Speedy." For his motor car was always the latest model and the fastest on the road. And the damsels struggled one with another for the place by his side.

* * *

But, alas, it came to pass that Speedy's car was taken from him, after the third smash-up. And, thereafter, the damsels were "not at home" when he called. For not every man that seemeth like "an answer to prayer" when he furnisheth the car, is one that a woman would choose for a moonlight stroll.

* * *

And the third bachelor called himself "Sheik," and believed himself a heartbreaker and a winner with woman. For his nerve was great, and many damsels had admired his "line."

* * *

And, lo, it came to pass that the women staged a "leap year party," whereat the men stood against the wall and waited for the damsels to seek them out, even as the women had waited for the men, for many years.

* * *

And, behold, the eyes of "Sheik" were opened and he was filled with wonder. For the damsels passed him by, and sought out only the BEST dancers and the ELIGIBLE men; and he saw, as in a great white light, that he was only a "second," where marrying men and youths were plentiful.

* * *

Verily, verily, the confidence of man in his own charms doth not pass understanding. For so long as he doeth the inviting and the spending, women will pursue him, and NO woman will open his eyes.

* * *

But when he standeth upon his OWN merits, peradventure many a man who thinketh himself a medal-winner might find himself only an "also-ran!" SELAH.

ROUND TABLE of BUSINESS

Prosperity Forecasts Borne Out — Pipe Mills Production Increased; Blaw-Knox Earnings High.

By GEORGE H. SNYDER.

THE prediction of several months ago that the steel companies in this district would show even better results in the present quarter than were reported for the second quarter now seems practically assured of fulfillment.

It was generally expected that higher prices would prevail. A seasonal decline in shipments was also likely, but this never materialized.

INSTEAD of operations declining during August an operating rate of 85 per cent of capacity was maintained. The continued activity of automobile manufacturers and of other steel consuming industries kept tonnage moving in great volume.

The advancing tendency of prices may have stimulated demand, although it is unlikely that much material was actually shipped in anticipation of requirements in this day of hand-to-mouth buying. Heavy contracting future requirements at the old prices tended to defer the effectiveness of higher prices.

NEXT week will start a critical period for the industry. September 10 was the final date for specifying shipments on third quarter contracts. A price of $2 a hundred pounds has been announced for fourth quarter delivery of bars, plates and shapes.

Recent experience has shown that such an asking price may not actually go into effect. The stand taken by producers from now on will have much to do with earnings in the final three months of the year. It is considered likely that business will actually be taken at $1.90 to $1.95.

THE present outlook is for a good earnings showing for the entire year from steel companies operating in this district. The first quarter showed a sharp drop in earnings as compared with the corresponding three months of 1927. The second was greater than both the first quarter and the same quarter of the previous year for many producers.

The last half of 1927 was marked by falling prices and reduced operations so that there is little doubt that the remainder of the year will show substantial increases over a year ago.

ON October 1 the reduced discounts on flat rolled steel will go into effect and this will yield large savings to many producers.

The pipe mills which were working at about 60 per cent of capacity for over a year have increased production to over 75 per cent.

Increased activity in California oil fields and the laying of new pipe lines have contributed greatly to the revival in demand for pipe.

The tin plate mills which have been running practically at capacity all of this year are reducing their output with the approach of the close of the fruit packing season.

THE Blaw-Knox Company showed very satisfactory earnings results in the first half of this year. Net income after taxes and all other charges was $691,861, or $2.50 a share on the stock. Thus in six months the greater part of an entire year's dividend requirements were earned. The stock is on $1 annual dividend basis. A stock dividend of 10 per cent was paid on January 10, increasing the capitalization to 276,325 shares. An extra dividend of 50 cents was paid last year in addition to the regular quarterly dividends. In 1927 Blaw-Knox earned $1,352,026 or $5.20 a share.

SUBURBAN ELECTRIC UP TO NEW HIGH RECORD

Suburban Electric Development sold at a new high record in the Pittsburgh Stock Exchange today. The issue opened at 19¼ and was bid up rapidly to 20. Optimistic views on the outlook for the electric equipment market during the fall season are believed largely responsible for the strength in the shares.

United Engineering and Foundry common continued its advance. Although company officials have denied rumors of consolidations or the closing of large new contracts the stock opened at 47¾ and moved up to 48.

Trading was brisk during the short session. Carnegie Metals was off a fraction in the early transactions. William Zoller common opened higher. The Arkansas Natural Gas stocks sold at virtually unchanged figures. Standard Sanitary was also unchanged from the previous sale.

NEWS AND VIEWS

Gold Dust and Linseed.

G. K. Morrow, president of the Gold Dust Corporation, confirmed the purchase of the Rockefeller and Du Pont holdings of American Linseed, and said that the former had been bought for cash and that the latter for cash and stock, leaving the Du Ponts with a stock interest in the new company. Mr. Morrow said minority interests in American Linseed would receive an offer of stock or cash for their holdings.

Of the $12,000,000 to be realized by the new financing, about two-thirds will be paid to the former controlling interests in American Linseed and the rest will be used for working capital, he said. About 700,000 shares of Gold Dust common will be outstanding when the remainder of American Linseed stock is purchased. The plant of the Gold Dust Corporation now carried on the books at $2,478,090 has been written down to $1.

Mr. Morrow said American Linseed's selling system may be used in the sales of Gold Dust.

It is noted that a more conservative market attitude exists in many conservative commission houses. STOCK MARKET PRICES SPURT FURTHER

NEW YORK, Sept. 8.—(AP.)—Stock prices made further recovery at the opening of today's market. Initial gains of a point or more were recorded by Hudson Motors, Curtiss Aeroplane, Houston Oil and American Sugar Refining. One block of 20,000 shares of Armour A changed hands at 22⅝, up fractionally, and a new high record.

With the public back in the market on a large scale, pools continued to whip up their favorites, pushing at least a score issues to new high records in the first half hour of trading.

Fox Film quickly jumped to the leadership of the amusement group by climbing 5 points to a new high record at 114½ on buying influenced by merger reports and predictions of large earnings from new talking picture devices. Warner Brothers "A" ran up 8 points to a new high at 130. Keith Albee moved up 1⅝ to a new top at 28¾, in reflection of the organized efforts being made to increase the popularity of vaudeville.

Rumors of an early resumption of dividends on American Sugar Refining sent that issue up more than 4 points to a new 1928 top at 80½. Associated Dry Goods, Consolidated Gas (new), Eaton Axle, Motor Wheel, Public Service of New Jersey, Timken Roller Bearing and Commercial Solvents also reached new high ground.

Gardner Motors was heavily bought on the announcement that the company intended to enter the aviation industry. Montgomery-Ward also was in brisk demand. Radio, U. S. Steel common and General Motors were slow in getting started. American Can, A. M. Byers and National Tea ran into further profit taking.

Establishment of another new low record by sterling cables at $4.851-16 was the only development of interest in the foreign exchange market.

Heavy Registration Shows Vote Can Be Mustered

Heaviest registration in history on the first day for personal enrollment of voters for the November election indicates a record-breaking vote. While it is evidence of widespread interest in the contest for the presidency, credit must be given the Chamber of Commerce for its appeal, through the newspapers, that all citizens register and vote.

The heavy local registration indicates, too, that it is possible to "get the vote out." It is too bad that it cannot be done on all occasions. No election should be neglected by our citizens. It is just as important to all of us that those on which our local government depends have as much attention as a state or national election. We approve the great interest being taken in the coming contest because it is a healthy sign of a realization of the responsibility of citizenship. We would like to see that realization evident at all times.

There remain two more registration days. Let all citizens not already registered prepare themselves to do their duty at the polls. It may get them into the habit of voting. If all vote at all elections there will soon be an end to many political practices now complained of, since the better class of citizens certainly are in the majority and can control.

Britain Will See Them

And Will Be VERY Polite.

THIS IS KING AUYAMA OF ENOGU WITH WIFE AND CHILD

This gentleman, sitting in royal state, with his bare feet on a fine leopard skin is one of many kings in Africa and elsewhere to whom Great Britain is most polite.

And King Auyama, soon to visit in London, is polite to them, looks after their interests and sees that they get what they want in his land, men to work for very little and all kinds of rights in the strange wealth of Africa that he controls.

Interesting, and amazing to some other nationalities, is Britain's ability to manage an empire scattered all over the world and to keep, contented under British sway, rulers and populations of every conceivable kind.

Rajahs, and "untouchables," in India, are alike controlled by Britain most easily. The Rajahs love the British because Britain keeps them on their thrones with pockets full, free from dangers, with all their collections of dancing girls, free from interference.

The miserable "untouchables," lowest caste in India, worship the British rule and the British King, because under British rule they are not as horribly miserable as they were under their own vile native rulers.

In Asia, Africa, Australia, New Zealand, here on the North American continent, in the West Indies, all over the world, Britain manages to rule different peoples of different habits and religions, and to keep them CONTENTED.

Her different subjects may hate each other, but they DON'T hate Britain, or at least not very MUCH.

The British have under them worshipers of every religion on earth. And THEY LET THEM ALONE, to worship as, and what, they please. That's the British secret.

The Mohammedan Muezzin can call out from the minaret of his mosque, anything that he likes about Allah and Mohammed.

The Hindu may bump his head on the ground before a god with many legs and arms, or despite all his protestations of respect for animal life, he may cut the throats of 10,000 goats and spill the blood to please his gods. The British let them do exactly as they please as long as they buy British cotton, British hardware, pay British taxes, and admit the supremacy of the British government.

That is what you may call wisdom.

And this picture shows what you might call an interesting family group.

With Great Britain to look after him this king is free from worry. He wears clothing made in Manchester. When he goes to England and puts on shoes, they will be BRITISH shoes.

His wife wears everything British, doubtless, and so does the heir apparent, sucking an "oversized" stick of British peppermint candy.

This picture is interesting to American salesmen, a fine study in complete British salesmanship.

To sell goods be popular.

The British know how to be popular when they want to.

Use Salt

On Fresh Okeechobee.

Take with many grains of salt news of terrible tornadoes, floods, etc., in Florida, Georgia and other points South. You read "Waters are rising in Lake Okeechobee, flood from that source is feared." Lake Okeechobee is connected with the Atlantic Ocean by two great canals. There ought to be room in the Atlantic for Lake Okeechobee's surplus waters, although it is the second largest body of fresh water inside United States boundaries.

Hollywood

HOLLYWOOD, Sept. 8.—An opening night of the Follies or Scandals is a peanut affair compared to a first-night showing of a movie in Hollywood. The town throws a collective hat in the air and snaps into the frenzy of an epileptic seizure. Ga-ga is the term.

Despite the fact that movie stars are as plentiful here as skyscrapers in New York, there is no place in the world where they are the objects of such attention and worship. At noon preceding the night of a premiere the crowds begin to arrive.

By dusk cordons of police and state militiamen hurl themselves into the throngs to clear a path for motor traffic. A battery of searchlights makes the block the light of noonday. Sidewalks are jammed to suffocation; surrounding windows are jammed and rooftops packed.

Scores risk their necks to hang to dizzy flag poles. News reel and still shot photographers are there to snap celebrities as they step from their limousines. Famous directors—it was Fred Niblo at the one I attended—act as radio announcers to call off names of those considered important.

Each is asked to step to the microphone and say a few words to radioland. All are togged up like Mrs. Astor's plush horse—orchids, ermine, sable, diamonds and pearls—and trying dreadfully to appear as though they didn't expect the ovation for which they came.

The outside crowds never move while the performance is on and after midnight the same hurrah is repeated while a giant megaphone shouts "Miss Talmadge's car," "Mr. Gilbert's car" and so on. In the crowds are the pathetic extras whose eyes are lit with the burning hope.

There are two or three of these spectacular openings a month, and enthusiasm never wanes. The average charge is $5 a seat, and there is an immediate sell-out a few hours after they are on sale. Only movie-mad Hollywood could endure their monotonous repetition. Oh, yes, two stars were chewing gum.

Hollywood reflects every fashion foible of illustrious stars. Just now the Greta Garbo influence in coiffure is pronounced. All the girls wear long bobs in the Garboesque manner. Greta seems to be the newest "American sweetheart."

* * *

And the chemical blondes promenading the boulevard offer a peroxided patina that is never seen elsewhere. It is a sort of bilious yellow—the color of Chicago taxicabs—and has the artificiality of a Bowery theater back drop. And there is a distinction, too, between the blondes and the "white hennas."

* * *

One of the new eating haunts along Hollywood boulevard having its hour of popularity is Henry's. It is a place serving food in a rackety-bang manner, but filled with the atmosphere of the studio. The evening I was there I saw Victor McLaglen, Mike Donlin, Ramon Novarro and Mollie O'Day as well as a colorful aray of extras—from the embryo Jackie Coogan type with curls to the tottering old grandpa. Henry's is reported to have been backed by Chaplin.

* * *

The Hollywood parade of strollers is heaviest at 6 p. m. You see giants, midgets, Chinese and Japanese flappers, bonneted old women, sun-bronzed cowboys, Afro-American sheiks, collar ad. boys, baby doll types with taffy colored ringlets and the ever present crowd of curious with eyes saucered in awe waiting at the studio gates for the whistle to blow.

* * *

The celebrity luncheon place is still Montmartre, which advertises the pronunciation in parenthesis (Mo-Mart) under the name. The food is more expensive here and in the evening a master of ceremonies asks the distinguished boys and girls to arise and bow. They never disappoint their dear public.

* * *

Hollywood is 25 years old this week. And there is a hot rumor it is learning to walk.

Garrett P. Serviss Says:

The Call of the Stars

NOW or never, if you are going to learn the stars, and, as Thomas Carlyle said, "make yourself at home in the starry heavens." He deeply regretted in his later years that he had not done that very thing, but he tried to make up for it by reading. He got on so well in that way that his reference to the influence on the mind of Mohammed of the electric brightness of the star Canopus, gleaming like a watching eye over the Arabian deserts, is one of the most thrilling sentences he ever wrote.

In summertime and early autumn, study the stars. Then everything invites you in that direction. The cool of the evening, the steadiness of the atmosphere, the comfort of being out of doors, the fragrance of the fields and gardens, like the perfumed air of the theater—for it is the theater of the universe whose illimitable scenes are displayed before your eyes—how can anyone then avoid lifting up his face to the evening sky?

If the full moon is there, as she is in the opening nights of September, 1928, she will be the queen of the spectacle, the prima donna, and the dimmed stars will be but coryphees surrounding her. But she passes on, "monthly changing in her circled orb," and within a few nights the sidereal glories again shine forth with undiminished splendor.

The Milky Way never appears so brilliant as in the summer and autumn. The great stars then are Arcturus, Vega, Antares, denen, Attair, Formathaut; the great constellations are Scorpio, Sagittarius, Ophiunchus, Bootes, Hercules, Lyra, Aquila, Cygnus (with the Northern Cross), Pegasus, Andromeda, Cassiopeia. Look them up in a star map, or, better, a planisphere, or, still better, join some local astronomical association (they are multiplying fast now), and make their acquaintance face to face. The stars surround the world; when you know them you are never lost and never lonely. They rise and set in their regular course over every land. They guide the sailor in all seas. They lead the explorer to the poles, for the sun itself is only a near-by star. For escaping slaves, and all fugitives, they have ever been as friends that take you by the hand and lead you in safety.

The intellectual influence of the stars are seen in the science of astronomy, which has always led the human mind. Their moral influence is like a miracle. If every prison cell had a window through which the stars could be seen circling quietly through the sky, thousands of troubled souls would be soothed and healed, and evil thoughts be driven away, if but for a time.

The whole human race, in every phase of social and moral development, is a witness to the truth that the contemplation of the starry heavens is the great medicine of humanity, marvellous in its soothing and restoring power.

"Through the transparent darkness," wrote Emerson, "the stars pour their almost spiritual rays. Man under them seems a young child, and his huge globe a toy."

There lies the secret of their influence—they make us children again. They strip off all of our pretenses, arrogance and false pride, reduce us to moral nakedness under their light, and refresh us as with a purifying bath. In the presence of the universe we become aware at once of our real stature and of our true place in the sum of things. To many the call of the stars seems the only summons to immortality.

The White Man's Need

THE paleface, who has so long lorded it over the black, brown or yellow man, will not relish the latest dictum of science—that he has no biological superiority.

All that science will accord him to justify his advantages is that he got the start in applying the teachings of science.

If the arena of contest had been philosophy, he would have been outclassed. If it had been simply physical endurance, the Olympic games showed that he would have been no better than at par.

Not less self-confidence but more tolerance is the white man's need.

Swallow Your Pride

DON'T allow your pride to prevent you from following the line which you can do best.

The world is filled with persons who are earning small salaries because their pride will not allow them to pursue the occupations for which they are best fitted.

It is easy to fill a position that the ordinary run of people occupy.

There is small remuneration for the ordinary job.

It is the expert who draws the big salary.

So, why not be an expert in something?

It does not matter so much what, as long as you stand first in your line.

If your income were larger, you could provide more adequately for your family.

You want comfort for your dear ones.

You are willing to go without many things you want, for their sake.

But it is a false position you take when you think that you deserve more credit for filling a position merely for its prestige.

It takes money to maintain a family and pay for incidentals necessary to education and travel. Be a first, not a second, rater.

The Rhyming Optimist

By ALINE MICHAELS

He Who Laughs

HE who laughs with life will find
Days are sunny, folks are kind.
While the cares he knew of old,
Doubts and worries manifold,
Fall, forgotten, far behind.

He who trusts in life will learn
Just how bright its fires can burn;
Every shining ship of dream
With new glory in its gleam
Safe to harbor will return.

He who enjoys in life will see
Bright hopes flourish like a tree
Rooted in a kindly soil,
Since from vexing thought's turmoil
Laughter's magic sets him free.

Isn't It So?

Great Passages from the Bible

Exhortation to Repentance

(Hosea 14)

O ISRAEL, return unto the Lord thy God; for thou hast fallen by thine iniquity.

Take with you words, and turn to the Lord: say unto him, Take away all iniquity, and receive us graciously: so will we render the calves of our lips.

Asshur shall not save us; we will not ride upon horses: neither will we say any more unto the work of our hands, Ye are our gods: for in thee the fatherless findeth mercy.

I will heal their backsliding, I will love them freely: for mine anger is turned away from him.

I will be as the dew unto Israel: he shall grow as the lily, and cast forth his roots as Lebanon.

His branches shall spread, and his beauty shall be as the olive tree, and his smell as Lebanon.

They that dwell under his shadow shall return; they shall revive as the corn, and grow as the vine: the scent thereof shall be as the wine of Lebanon.

Ephraim shall say, What have I to do any more with idols? I have heard him, and observed him: I am like a green fir tree. From me is thy fruit found.

Who is wise, and he shall understand these things? prudent, and he shall know them? for the ways of the Lord are right, and the just shall walk in them: but the transgressors shall fall therein.

Tales that are Told

Worst Story I Have Heard Today

By WILL ROGERS

ONE of the boys that had to go to summer school this summer was complaining to his dad after it was all over that he didn't think it was worth while.

"My boy," says the old man, "that's the only kind of thing that is worth while. The only things nobody can take away from you is what you have learned."

"Well, yes," says the boy, "and you might say what I ain't learned, too. I'd like to see anybody take them away from me."

The Shirker

COMMANDER FITZHUGH GREEN, who has established in New York a kind of travel bureau for outfitting explorers, said at a recent wedding breakfast:

"Explorers love exploring, but they hate the dull, hard work of getting their equipment together. They're like bachelors in a way.

"The mother of eight grownup daughters turned to a wealthy bachelor one night and said in a menacing voice:

"'With your liking for the fair sex it's strange that you have never married.'

"'What would you?' said the bachelor. 'A man can love flowers without wanting to be a gardener.'"

Tip-Top Tips

"'ERE you are, ladies and gentlemen," shouted the raucous-voiced tipster at the race meeting. "What did I tell yer yesterday?"

Nobody made an answer to this question, and once more the tipster began his shouting.

"Didn't I say that Broad Bean wasn't a runner?" he yelled. "And didn't I say that Water Tap would still be running, and that Dusty Carpet would take a lot of beating?"

Still there was no answer. But the powerful-voiced man was not a bit dismayed.

"Now," he cried, "I've a certainty for you today in the next race. Back Loose Button, it's sure to come off!"

Good Idea

"I LENT a friend $100 and did not get a receipt, what shall I do?"

"Write and ask him for the $200 he owes you."

"But it was only $100."

"Yes, he will answer that he only owes you $100 and you will get your receipt."

Aloofness

By DR. FRANK CRANE.

Vice President Dawes says that mediocrity needs aloofness to preserve its dignity.

For that matter so does everything.

Familiarity breeds contempt, in the case of things that are really great as in the case of mediocre things. No man is a hero to his valet simply because the valet sees too closely the nine-tenths of a man that is merely human.

We are all human, all made out of mud, and in the case of the best of us and of the greatest of us the majority of our daily acts lie within this human plane. We sleep, eat, drink, grow irritated and act altogether like everybody else.

Most men seeing us at these things think we are altogether common.

As a matter of fact a man is great only in extraordinary times and in certain crises. Maude Adams was great upon the stage when she was acting, but she wasn't particularly great when she was sleeping or eating her meals.

People make the mistake of thinking that a great man must be great in everything.

Renan was once the guest of honor at a dinner which a woman gave him in order to lionize him. She had it arranged that at the ringing of a bell every one should keep quiet, for the master was going to talk. She duly rang the bell at a certain instant and the master spoke. What he said was: "Please pass the salt."

A great man needs not only intrinsic greatness, but he needs people capable of appreciating it. Many a man is not great to his wife simply because she does not know how to appreciate him.

In other words, it takes two people to make a great man, a great man himself and somebody that knows enough to see how great he is.

The purpose of the conventionalities and the rules of politeness are to preserve what may be called our inter-planetary disfances. Every one needs a certain amount of isolation, of aloofness, just as every landscape needs the proper point of view from which to appreciate it.

If you get too close to beauty's cheek and examine it under the microscope you will see all the pitted pores and hairs and an aspect altogether unlovely. You must get the proper distance away in order to comprehend its beauty.

So the sunset is a gorgeous thing, simply because we are at the proper place to observe it. If we were up in the midst of it we could not see its beauty at all.

Let us remember that to see great men and appreciate them involves a certain amount of greatness within ourselves. Many people are unable to comprehend the greatness of the Christ simply because they have not enough of the Christlike spirit within them.

OH, THESE WOMEN!

By LEOLA ALLARD

A LADY had guests at dinner the other night, out in Denver. They were discussing the subject of men crying. All of the guests said that they never had seen a man really cry.

The canny little daughter of the house, 10 years old, spoke up and said: "I have never seen my father cry but once, and that was at his wedding."

An English woman, 105, says that the young girls of today, with bare arms, low necks, short skirts and bobbed hair, are headed straight for the lower regions.

To hear old ladies talk you would think sin was something new, invented and practiced only by the modern woman.

Yet when women wore hairpins, a good many of them were found where they had no business to be. And men tripped and fell much more easily on long skirts than on the modern waist ruffle.

The pet abomination of wives is the snoring husband. These strange sleeping noises have headed many an irritated wife into a divorce court. Well, here is the remedy:

A prominent man thought of it, and he has followed his own prescription for years. Just before going to sleep he sticks a small strip of adhesive tape over his lips. This makes him breathe through the nose, and he doesn't utter a sound all night.

The only trick is to get them to do it.

A girl with a chiffon dress, sitting in her office yesterday, sewing a strip of tiny weights around the bottom of her skirt. It takes such a tiny wind to lift such a light skirt! You buy the weights by the yard.

The woman sewing the weights was 50 years old.

There probably won't be any rush on the weight market.

Two women were chattering at luncheon, in a Fifth avenue tea room.

They were giving their private opinions of a man who was the husband of a mutual friend.

It seems the gentleman had an argument with his employer and quit his job. He explained to his wife that he had quit. His pride demanded the resignation.

And the wife flew into a rage. Her friends were sympathizing with her. The reason was—she bought a beautiful fur coat and now she can't finish the payments on it.

And the ladies all figured that a husband had no right to any pride in a situation like this!
